'Larry Bird is a big (Bob) Cousy.'

Red Auerbach

By Mike McCormick

I remember the first time I heard the name, Larry Bird.

The speaker was former Indiana State basketball coach Gordon Stauffer.

The year was 1973. Larry Bird was a junior at Springs Valley high school in southern Indiana.

I was discussing ISU's recruiting prospects with Stauffer, a subject that always interested me. He reviewed with me the various senior prospects that his staff was hopeful of bringing to the Terre Haute campus.

Then he stopped and, in almost a whisper, said: "Right now, we've got a kid for next year from a little town in southern Indiana who is really super."

"What's his name?"

"Bird. Larry Bird. He's the type of kid who could turn around our whole program. He is really something."

"Where is he from?"

"Springs Valley. He's about 6-5 and growing. You almost have to see him to believe him."

"What do you think our chances are of getting him next year?"

"I really think we can get him. Very few people have heard of him. If we can just stay on top of the situation and his team doesn't go too far in the state tournament so that the big schools see him, I think we'll get him."

Dreams Collapse . . .

Stauffer's hopes and dreams of recruiting Bird collapsed when Bobby Knight signed Bird to a national letter on intent after his senior year.

I talked to Stauffer a few times the next year about current recruiting. On one occasion, I asked: "What about that Bird kid from Springs Valley?"

Gordon paused and said: "We're still after him. I'm afraid some of the big basketball schools have seen him and are really going after him. I still think we are ahead but we have our work cut out for us. He's really the type of kid that would be happier at a smaller school."

Bird, who by his senior year had grown to 6-7, attracted the press and college coaches with a 30 point scoring average his senior year. He was named to the Bloomington Herald - Telephone's All-State team and, then, to the Indiana All-Star squad. But his name still was not among those listed as the top prospects in Indiana.

Stauffer was heartsick when Bird signed with IU. "We just couldn't compete with the glory of Indiana University," he said after the announcement. "I really think the kid made a mistake."

Stauffer appeared clairvoyant in early 1974 when it was announced that Bird left Indiana University. Rumors were rampant that he "couldn't cut it." I never expected to hear his name again. How wrong I was!

. . . But Then Came True

It was about a year later that new Athletic Director and head coach Bob King brought Bird's name up again. King told me that Bird was enrolling at Indiana State and would be redshirted. Then, he added: "He's a super player. He's got the potential to be as good as anybody we have ever had."

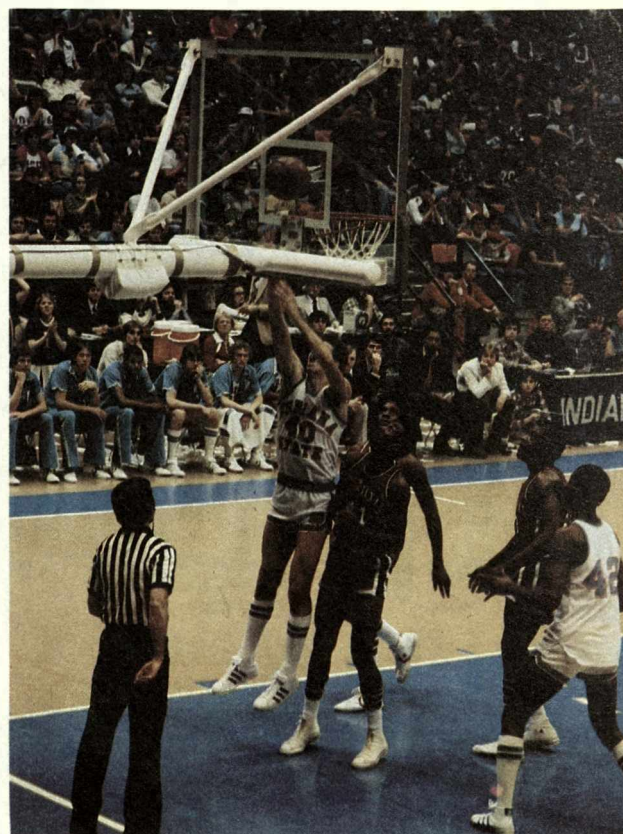

A few weeks later I shook hands with Larry Bird in a local restaurant. He was quiet and appeared shy. I had never seen him on the basketball floor.

The year Bird redshirted, former Marshall, Ill., star Howie Johnson transferred from the University of Illinois and one of Stauffer's recruits, Ray Jackson, was also redshirted. Rumors became rampant that the "redshirt team" consistently beat the starters.

Indiana State suffered through another mediocre season that year: 13-12, in King's first year at the helm. But, as the season wore on, it became clear that the coaching staff was already looking forward to "next season" and had great expectations for the 6-9 kid from Springs Valley.

Bird's real hallmarks have been his genuine unselfishness on the basketball court and his breathtaking passing ability. His talent for finding the open man and passing off is without parallel in local history. In this sequence Bird (top) looks one way, and passes another to Brad Miley (bottom) who puts in two points against West Texas State.

Photos by American Visuals

In late summer of 1976, I saw Bird once again having dinner with prospective junior college recruit Harry Morgan at Ambrosini's Restaurant. The next time I saw him was on the basketball floor.

Bird Debuts

My father was in Fort Wayne in November, 1976, and I came home from a visit with him to see Larry Bird's basketball debut at ISU Against the Brazilian National team. He scored 31 points, got 15 rebounds and handed out eight assists. But the Sycamores won easily, 96-76, and I was not sure how good the competition was.

In Bird's first "official" game --- against Chicago State, another unknown entity -- he scored 31 again, nabbed 18 boards and had ten assists. I decided that he was a "pretty good-looking sophomore." But I refused to venture any opinion until the Sycamores played Purdue at West Lafayette that year. The Boiler-makers, loaded with former Indiana high school stars, were considered a Big Ten title contender.

Purdue won, 82-68, but as I walked away from Mackey Arena that night I knew that Larry Bird was the best player on the floor. He scored 27 points and pulled down 15 rebounds. He also blocked three shots, handed out four assists and made several passes that should have been so recorded if his teammates had been able to handle them.

It was after that game that I decided that Gordon Stauffer and Bob King were right about the kid from Springs Valley.

But even yet I didn't know how great he really was or would be.

Meeting the Challenges

Bird was consistently impressive in those early games. But his performances became "great" in early January. I particularly remember the Butler game. The Bulldogs' defensive whiz, John Dunn, was quoted in the Indianapolis News on the day of the game that he would "stop Bird." Somebody must have put the clipping up on the bulletin board in the Sycamores' locker room.

With Dunn doing everything in his power to stop Larry, the ISU sophomore tossed in 42 points on 16 of 29 shooting. He also dominated the boards and handed out seven assists. The Sycamores won, 90-67, and Larry had set a new Hulman Center scoring record. He had met Dunn's challenge.

He followed that game with 33 points (15 of 23 from the field) against Missouri Western and 47 (another record) against Missouri-St. Louis, in a game publicized as a match between the new Sycamore star and Division II scoring leader Bobby Bone. Again, Larry Bird met the challenge.

Yet, in my opinion his first "great" game was here against Centenary. That year Centenary was a good team and had scared the Sycamores earlier at Shreveport, La., 74-71; they had one of NCAA scoring leaders in Bobby White. Bird had scored 28 points in their first meeting and decided to use a box and one zone against him at Hulman Center.

With a defensive player hanging on him like glue, Bird hit 14 of 16 field attempts, nine of nine free throws and got 19 rebounds. It was an unbelievable performance witnessed by 8051 fans. Of course ISU won handily, 88-70.

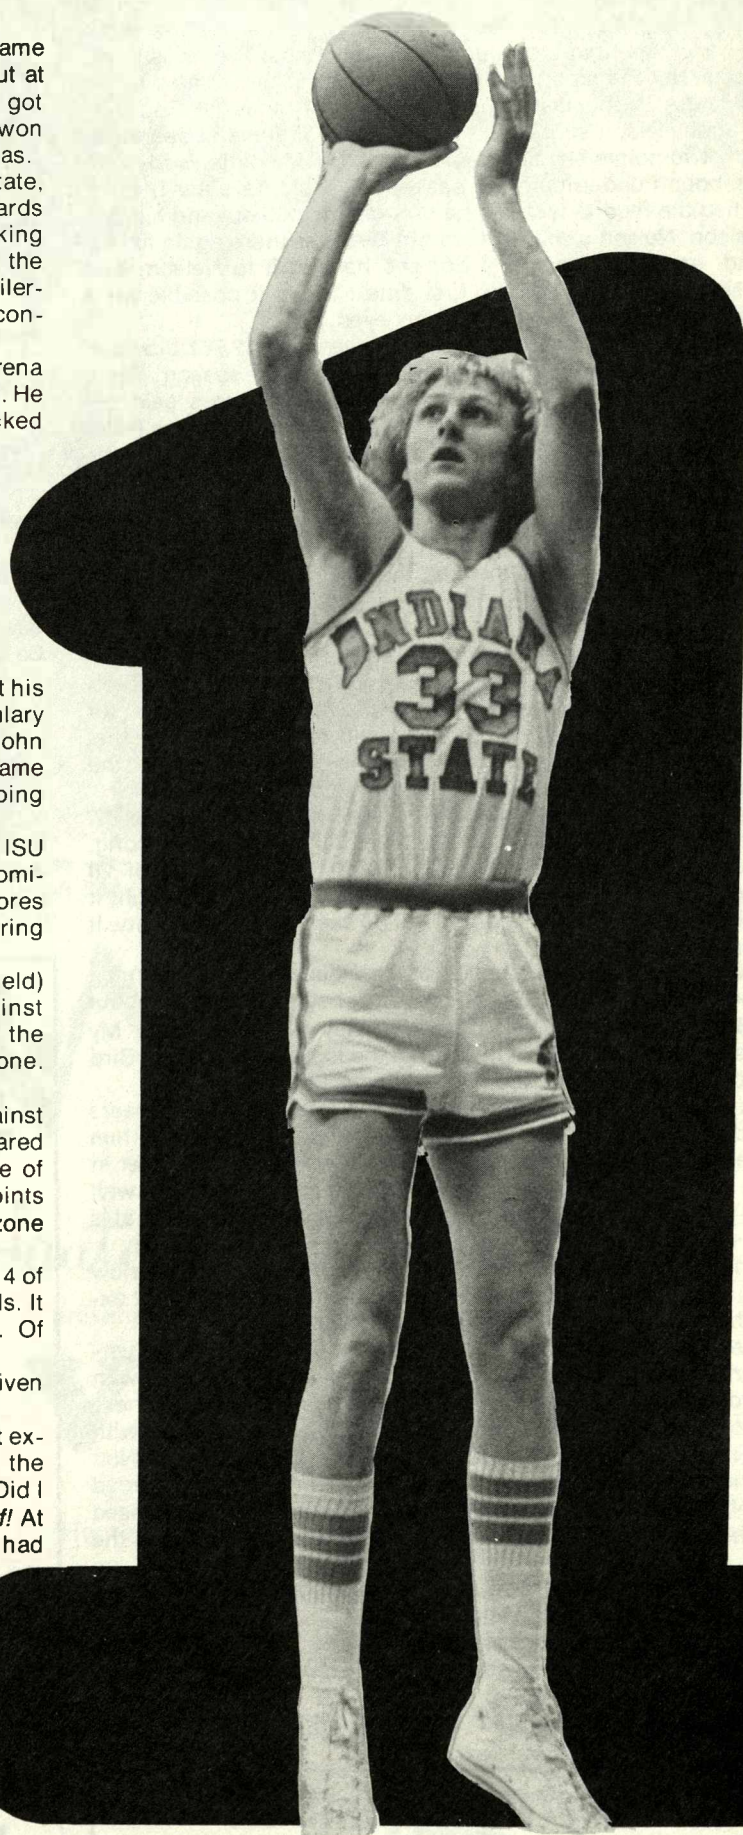

For the remaining two and one-half years, Larry Bird has given me a truckload of memories.

I was at Normal, Ill., on Jan. 25, 1977, when Bird got his first exposure to the Chicago media. I was anxious that he and the Sycamores do well against Illinois State and before the press. Did I have to worry? All Bird did was score 31 points in the first half! At halftime Redbird partisans were muttering to themselves. They had just seen one of the great performances ever by a college player. . . Illinois State won the game, 70-64, and knocked the Sycamores out of the national rankings. It was their second loss.

But Bird and teammates were ready for the rematch at Terre Haute the next week. Larry scored 40 points and stole the ball four times in a 100-84 rout before the first packed house in Hulman Center history.

I remember the time he fell against Cleveland State and was helped from the floor. The injury appeared serious. Was that the end of his college career?

Against Eastern Michigan, Larry hit at least four of his patented deflection shots, finished with 40 points and 13 rebounds on 17 of 24 shooting. EMU Coach Ray Scott, the former Detroit Piston, could not believe it.

Larry continued from page 5

And who could forget the final home game of the season in 1976-77? Loyola was here. So were 10,420 spectators. The sign at Hulman Center read "Sold Out" for the first time. Larry's final stats: 20 of 27 from the field for 45 points, 17 rebounds, five assists and five steals. But the most memorable moment of the game was his unselfishness in the last minute in an effort to assist Rockville senior John Nelson score a bucket in his final home appearance.

Only two points shy of his school record 47 points, Bird grabbed a rebound underneath the basket. He could have easily put it in and tied the record. Instead, he brought the ball out and handed it to Nelson. Nelson's shot missed but Bird was there again for the rebound. Again he brought it out and handed it to Nelson. And again Nelson missed. For the first time I found it possible for a basketball player to bring tears to my eyes.

I was also at Butler (Hinkle) Fieldhouse when 12,767 crowded into it for the Sycamores' final game of the regular season. There were hopes for an NCAA bid. The Indianapolis press said the crowd was there to witness George Theofanis' final game as Butler coach. They knew better. The crowd was there to see the sophomore phenom from Springs Valley, Larry Bird. Bird did not disappoint them. He hit 19 of 30 shots, nine of ten free throws and nabbed 19 rebounds. He had tied his school record 47 points.

Houston and the NIT

Then, on to Houston for the NIT. At the time, you may recall, Larry Bird's reputation had not spread outside of Indiana and Illinois. Sure, he was one of the top scorers in the nation, but the national media presumed that Bird was a gunner from a small basketball school in Indiana. I met ISU alum Bob Mayfield in Houston for the game and told him about the team and Bird. Again, I hoped that the team and Bird would show well in Hofheinz Pavilion before the Texas press. Today, I'm embarrassed that I doubted him.

As usual, Larry was superb. But the Sycamores lost, 83-82. Bird had completely dominated the matchup with Otis Birdsong, Houston's unanimous All-America, with 44 points on 19 of 28 shooting and 14 rebounds. When the game was over, I thought it was quite a shame that Larry would not be seen in New York City. It was depressing.

Then, suddenly, I was besieged by Houston newspapermen because I was wearing an ISU button. They began asking me about Larry Bird, the best basketball player they had ever seen. My depression turned to elation in spite of the loss. Finally, Larry Bird had been recognized outside of the Middle West.

You know most of the rest of the story. In his subsequent years in a Sycamore uniform --- as a junior and senior --- I watched him become what I believe to be the best college basketball player in history. And, for a guy who has been watching the sport for well over 30 years and marveled at the talent of Oscar Robertson, that is saying something.

Larry Bird has always met the challenge. He may be a bit slow and is not the world's greatest jumper but his all-around talent exceeds that of anybody who had put on basketball togs.

I went to Louisville to watch him try out for the World University games team after his sophomore season and sat with Creighton Coach Tom Apke, who was there as a spectator. There was a lot of talent on the floor. I was particularly impressed with James Bailey of Rutgers, Phil Hubbard of Michigan and Calvin Natt of Northeast Louisiana. I was hoping that Denny Crum, the head coach of the team, would recognize Bird's talents. When he missed a few shots I cringed at the thought that Bird might not make the team.

Then, one of the assistant coaches came over to talk to Apke and I overheard the conversation.

"What we need is a passer."

"Yea, the only great passer we have is Bird. Isn't he something?"

I left the tryouts confident that Larry Bird would make the team.

Legends about Larry have spread in the past two years. He can hit a softball a country mile and, together with his brother, led the Glenn Recreation Center league in home runs. He can hit the golf ball as far as Jack Nicklaus though he has not played the game much. And he can handle his own with a beer mug.

But he is really a private person who, by reason of his basketball exploits, has been wined and dined by many of the local citizenry. I have not been a part of that scene.

So, except for shaking his hand on one or two occasions, I have never really talked to him.

When I walked into the Indiana State locker room the other day to interview some other players, I intended to honor Larry's silence with the press. As I entered the room, Bird threw a dirty wet towel at a towel basket and it hit me in the face. He apologized profusely.

"I guess you must of known I was a newspaper reporter," I said in jest.

Bird smiled and, then, also in jest (I hope) said: "No, if I had known that I probably would have thrown a chair!"

That was the day before Bird established another school scoring record against Wichita State with 49 points before a national television audience.

Someday I may get to know him a little better. Someday I may even try to interview him.

But, if that day never comes, I still will never forget him and the entertainment he has provided me for three years. Frankly, I am emotional at his forthcoming departure. As Craig McKee has eloquently said: "Halley's Comet appears only once every 76 years. So does a Larry Bird."

Thanks, Larry

So, Larry, on behalf of Terre Haute and Indiana State fans everywhere, thank you for your substantial contributions to our lives.

And to David Israel of the Chicago Tribune, who has tried to compare you to Patricia Hearst, Jack Scott and Duane Thomas, and your other critics in the media who are distressed by your silence off the floor, "Go to hell!"

Leroy Staley Sparking the team from the bench

By Mike McCormick

"At first I didn't like it," Leroy Staley reflected, describing his role as a top reserve on this year's Missouri Valley Conference championship team, "but now I'm really into it. I realize how important my contribution can be to the team."

As most Sycamore fans know, the popular senior from Tampa, Fla., has not always made his contribution as a substitute. Few Purdue fans will forget Staley's 22-point performance against the Boilermakers in his second start in the Blue and White when ISU waltzed to a 91-63 victory.

Staley, who may be the most highly-recruited Sycamore on the roster, had some difficulties about mid-season last year. "I had some problems adjusting to guard and I began to feel pressure," he is not reluctant to admit that he gave some thought to leaving.

About 400 colleges, including Louisville, Florida and Florida State sought Leroy's services after his celebrated high school career at Tampa Jefferson where he and former Louisville center Rickey Gallon led thier school to the Final Four in the Florida state tournament. He opted for spectacular two-year stint at Florida College where he averaged 21.9 and 25 points a game respectively in the tough Florida juco league.

When Staley was ready to select the spot to conclude his college basketball career most of the same schools were around to woo him. Clemson and Colorado were among those at the top of his list before Indiana State got into the picture. Things just seemed to click. "I played against (former) Coach Stan Evans Miami Dade South team and Coach (Terry) Thimlar's father coached at Edison Community College and had seen me play. Then, just before Coach (Bill) Hodges came down to see me, I saw a news clipping about ISU. I came up to see the game against Loyola and was really impressed with the program and the crowd. That visit was all I needed to make up my mind," relates Staley.

Evans might have reminded the staff that Staley scored 33 points against Dade South in a tournament game.

Staley is not sorry he came. And he is particularly pleased to have his sweetheart for four and one-half years, Crystal Livingstone, with him. Crystal became Mrs. Leroy Staley last August 19.

"This season I'm more relaxed. Coach Hodges asked me where I felt most comfortable and I told him "in the forecourt." I think my experience at guard last season helped my ball handling skills, though."

When given the opportunity to fully relax, Leroy and Crystal go dancing, to the movies or just listen to music. Then me may be caught watching his basketball idol, Spencer Haywood, on television. Like many good college players, Staley would like to have a shot at professional basketball. "I understand that the Los Angeles Lakers have indicated some interest in me. We'll have to wait and see. If I have the chance I'll give it everything I have. Of course I want to get my degree (in Industrial Arts and Physical Education) and then I'd like to get into coaching."

Sycamore fans who have watched their adopted Floridian in action "even before the game when the crowd gets him "inspired"---know that Leory Staley lives by the motto: "I'll give it everything I have."

When Staley checks into the lineup early in the game, the Hulman Center crowds know that he will make something happen, offensively and defensively. His value to the team's successful season is measureless. Unlike most Florida natives, Staley has found his "place under the sun" in Indiana.

Bobby Heaton Thriving on pressure

The colorful sign on the Hulman Center wall read, "You're in good hands with Bob Heaton." This message and others went out over nationwide television Sunday, and it's really true.

ISU's powerful swingman from neighboring Cory is glad to be back in Indiana even though he would be graduating from college this spring if he hadn't made the change.

After an illustrious career playing basketball at Clay City High School, Heaton decided the time was ripe to get some experience living away from home. He accepted an offer from the University of Denver, a private college that soon began experiencing financial problems.

During his sophomore year, Denver travelled to Terre Haute for the Hall of Fame Classic tournament. When Denver played ISU on that Saturday night, Denver lost but Bob scored 21 points. There were lots of home-town people in the audience, friends from Clay County whooping it up, and Bobby liked their presence.

So after his second year at Denver, during which the basketball team won 12 games and lost 15, Heaton decided to transfer back home. Four of his teammates and the coach, Al Hardin from Covington, also left Denver at that time. Bob says that while the college's cost-cutting did not effect his scholarship, the fans there just were not enthusiastic about basketball.

"There's only be 500 or 600 at games. The people were more interested in ice hockey and skiing. So I contacted Coach Bob King and made the change. Last year I was redshirted and could only practice with the team. And that was hard," Heaton adds.

It's tough coming off the bench and having to play with great intensity right away, Bob says, but thinks the fact that he and Leroy Staley can come in fresh and help get the team going is a big plus. "We help make up what's lacking at the time and let the others, like Steve Reed, rest up and come back fresh. Someone must sacrifice," he points out.

When Heaton replaces Reed, Carl Nicks takes over as point guard. Heaton never fills that slot. But he does sometimes come into the game to replace one of the forwards.

A marketing major with a 3.3 average, Bob has never regretted returning from Colorado. "The students here are nicer, more like I'm used to, maybe more country," he says. "Since Denver was a private school, there were all different sorts of students, some very rich. Here they're all more alike. And they love basketball here."

"This summer I plan to work on jumping and strengthening my legs. I've learned a lot this year. I'll spend the summer preparing for next year. I hope to get a job nearby that permits me to practice and work out with the team," Bob said. "Then, next year we have a good nucleus coming back. We'll have to work harder than ever to prove we can play without Larry," he adds.

As for the upcoming tournament play, Heaton says he and his teammates are really looking forward to it. "After all, that's what it's really all about," he said. "Playing on a neutral court is easier than playing on another team's home court," he pointed out. "We'll work hard, play hard, and I think we can go as far as we want to. We can go all the way."

Steve Reed Steady as ISU goes

By Susan Crittenden

Sporting a blue UCLA tee shirt the day following the California team's defeat by unranked Washington, sophomore guard Steve Reed explained his decision to attend Indiana State University. He came here because he thought he'd have a fair chance to play basketball his freshman year. He also was anxious to go to a college that wanted him and that was in his home state of Indiana.

ISU coaches, students and fans are happy about Reed's choice. And so is he. He likes the school as well as the community, and they find in Steve a player who has it all together both on and off the court.

Reed has been playing almost flawlessly. He runs the offense, passes well, guards superbly, gives his share of assists, and if they need him to score, he does that too. In addition to being quick, Steve is a hard-working player who plays a team concept.

Two days before the team's final game of the Missouri Valley season, Reed took time out en route to lending an assist as a disc jockey on WPFR with teammate Bob "Tex" Ritter to answer some questions. "Training is pretty loose, it's based on being sensible," he said. "We eat one meal a day together. Otherwise, we're adults and expected to know what's necessary." He explained that ISU has not had the emphasis on basketball of a place like Kentucky, which has special housing for players.

As for practice, Reed noted that this time of year, daily practice is down to about an hour or a little more. In the pre-season months, October to December, the team spends two to three hours a day practicing; then in December and January the time is cut by about thirty minutes. "We couldn't practice any longer now," he said. "It's more the mental drain than the physical. You just can't keep your concentration any longer than that."

Practice always includes defensive drills, ball handling and shooting, along with offense work. Usually student coach Danny King practices with the guards, while assistant coach Mel Daniels helps the big men. Terry Thimlar scouts and recruits, primarily. And of course head coach Bill Hodges bears overall responsibility. Hodges's style is quite similar to that of his senior year high school coach, Jim Miller, Steve said.

Reed spent last summer at ISU working on his game, lifting weights, going to summer school and coaching at the Terre Haute Boys Club. "The game is so physical that the stronger you are the better. Weights help develop quickness, agility and stamina, too," Reed explained. He thinks his whole game has improved significantly during his two years as a Sycamore; his confidence has certainly increased.

There's always a lot of talk about the difficulty of road trips and the problems frequent games create. Steve explained some of these. "When we're out of town, the crowd is always against us. And the refereeing usually favors the home team. In addition, we're in strange surroundings. And staying around motels gets boring. Playing two games in three days, for examples, allows less practice. And we have less time to iron out problems -- fundamentals. But we're a good basic team and we can handle it," he said.

It's Reed's job to be sure that all the Sycamores know what they are supposed to be doing during a game; to make sure, he yells out plays to the team. The team has a different game plan against each opponent and players know ahead of time what they will try to do under different circumstances, such as getting the ball to Larry Bird under the basket. "We always run a passing game," Steve added. He said it was hard to single out his toughest guarding assignments of the year, but thought probably Derrek Mays of Illinois State and Milt Huggins of Southern Illinois were the most difficult. Since he's paired usually according to height, his 6'2-1/2" is not a problem.

Reed, an honor student concentrating on management in the business school, prefers to take his heaviest course load during the fall. First semester he took 18 hours; this spring he's carrying 12, the minimum students can take and maintain team eligibility. If a player requires tutoring in course work, he gets the help he needs.

Steve is looking forward to the upcoming MVC playoff games, and then, he hopes, to some NCAA play. When school ends in May, he will again forego a summer of relaxation in Warsaw and its lakes to remain in Terre Haute, go to summer school and work on his basketball game.

Alex Gilbert 'ISU looked good'

By Mike McCormick

Alex Gilbert removed a heavy layer of tape from his injured right leg and looked up.

"Well, I was looking for the best opportunity for me," he said. "I choose Indiana State because the situation looked good. Evansville, Arkansas and Missouri were attractive, too, but this situation looked the best. I think I made the right decision."

Gilbert had a lot of choices after an outstanding two-year career at Coffeyville (Kan.) Community Junior College where he scored 1015 points, including one 54-point, 17-rebound effort against Cowley County, was named first team all-conference in the Jayhawk Juco Conference won by national champion Independence and received Junior College All-America mention. Nearly 300 schools expressed interest in him.

Things were not the same when he graduated from East St. Louis Senior High two years before. "Very few schools were interested in me then. I almost went to the University of Missouri at St. Louis, the Division II team that had Bobby Bone," he said.

There were some highlights in Gilbert's high school career--particularly when his school finished third in the Illinois state tournament his junior year and boasted a 25-5 record.

The junior college experience helped Alex develop a very special skill: his jumping ability. "I guess I always had the ability to be a good jumper," the slim 6-7 1/2 junior said. Twice Gilbert cleared the magic 7-foot barrier in junior college competition. He has a measured 40-inch vertical leap, a feature that attracted ISU recruiter, Coach Bill Hodges.

Gilbert made an impressive debut for the Sycamores, scoring 16 points and grabbing nine rebounds against the tall Russian National team and followed it with 18 points and 15 boards against Lawrence.

When he scored 21 points against Southern Illinois, Coach Hodges commented: "That's the kind of power game that Alex is capable of playing. We are going to need his offensive abilities down the home stretch and in any post season tournament."

Hodges has been pleased with Gilbert's defensive progress: "He has made faster progress at the defensive end than any junior college recruit we have ever brought in. He continues to work hard to improve that part of his game."

The fifth of six children of Mr. and Mrs. Lonnie Gilbert is majoring in criminology. His father is a welder at Hussman Refrigeration in St. Louis. "We're a close family. They all have been over to see quite a few of the games." Alex almost missed the Evansville game when one of his brothers was tragically killed.

When away from the court, Alex likes to listen to music--particularly jazz.

During the season, he does not have much free time as he spends countless extra hours working to improve his basketball abilities. He is reluctant about participating in track and field this Spring, much to Coach Bill Malloy's distress.

Alex Gilbert has one more year on the hardwood for the Sycamores and, as Coach Hodges has said: "He's a very big part of our future plans."

Tom Crowder 'Incredible Hulk' keeps players loose

By Mike McCormick

Tom Crowder may not be named to the East All-Star team in the Pizza Hut Classic on March 31.

But, if he isn't, it won't be because his dorm mates at Rhoads Hall didn't try.

At last count, Indiana State's version of "The Incredible Hulk," was 60 in the voting---all on write-ins. Rhoads Hall has submitted 49,000 ballots adding the 6-5 senior's name. The Pizza Hut computers have been known to scratch their heads when his name is ejected along college basketball's elite.

Of course, those computers were not around three years ago when newspapers from coast-to-coast picked up an Associated Press laserphoto of Crowder kicking the bottom of the backboard, a trick he learned as a junior at North Vermillion high school. It was that year that the Cayuga native established an area record by nabbing 31 rebounds in a game against North Montgomery.

In spite of the feat, Crowder was not actively recruited as a basketball player. His athletic reputation was developed in track and field where he established a Terre Haute sectional record in the high jump by leaping 6-8 1/2. Under ISU Coach Bill Malloy, he has increased his person best to 6-10 1/2.

Bob King liked what he saw and, without scholarship, added "the Hulk" to his roster. He has been a valuable addition to the Sycamore squad, both on and off the floor. He's constantly keeping the players loose with his impressions and one-liners. And, when it is time to do battle, Crowder is always in the thick of things.

It has been a great experience for Crowder, who plans to return to Cayuga after his playing days are over. His father, Jim, is in the real estate and insurance business there and he and Tom's mother, Marcia, have not missed a home game in four years. "I've really enjoyed the opportunity to meet lots of people and go places with the team. This year has been terrific with all of the national publicity and my television debut as "The Hulk."

A few weeks ago, Crowder impressed Hollywood scriptwriters by standing on a table, sans shirt, and entertaining a local television audience with his impression of the "Incredible Hulk" on Captain Jack, Channel 10's rendition of Captain Kangaroo.

When he is not in the entertainment business, Crowder likes to shoot and fish. He has a large collection of guns and gas-powered model airplanes.

His gas-powered offensive performances have earned the plaudits of Sycamore fans for four years. Occasionally, he accommodates his chanting followers with an explosive show like his three-for-three effort in a little over two minutes against West Texas State. With a bit more exposure, his hulk-dunk might have been the rage of the Missouri Valley.

Or the Pizza Hut Classic.

His hustle and work on the hardwood has made him one of the most popular players to don an Indiana State uniform.

Rich Nemcek Sycamores' eighth man

If one could measure basketball potential, Indiana State junior Rich Nemcek would rate very high.

The Hammond Morton junior is a good ball-handler for his height (6-6) and is blessed with arms that are assets in rebounding and defending. He is also a fine shooter, capable of playing underneath or outside.

With seven starters, Nemcek has quickly been identified as the team's eighth man.

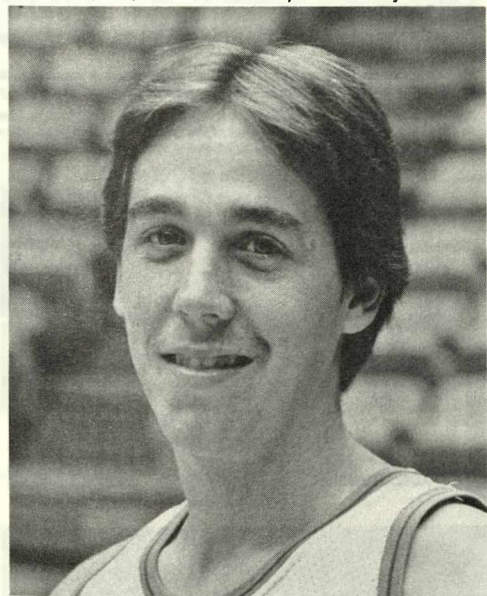

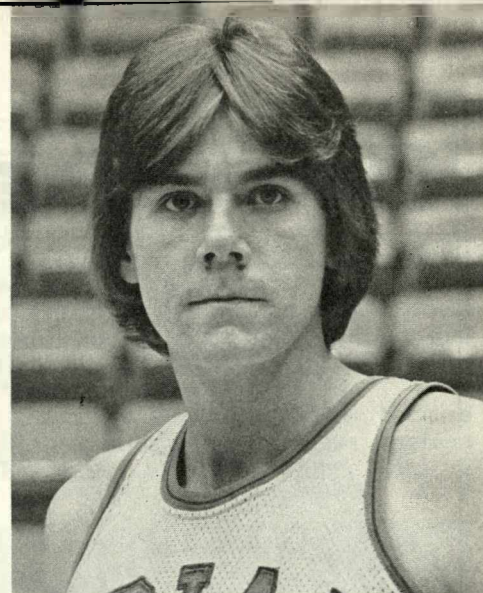

Last year, when he was selected the Most Valuable Player in Region IV of the national junior college tournament while playing at Wabash Valley Junior College of Mt. Carmel, Ill., Nemcek and present Sycamore teammate Eric Curry led the team to a 32-3 record.

Injuries have played some part in Nemcek's basketball career but he has avoided any problem this season.

The 21-year old business major has made substantial contributions in several games. Few will forget, for instance, the key basket and final rebound he corralled in the Sycamores 91-89 overtime victory at New Mexico State.

But Coach Bill Hodges thinks Nemcek's contribution will be even greater next season. By Mike McCormick

Scott Turner Best 'pure' ISU shooter

Who is the best pure shooter on the Sycamores' team? Larry Bird? Carl Nicks? Steve Reed? Bob Heaton? Leroy Staley?

The answer may be "None of the above."

Scott Turner, the 6-5 1/2 freshman from Bedford-North Lawrence, can shoot with any of them.

Though Turner has seen only limited playing time in his rookie season, he has shown the ability to be an offensive threat anywhere on the floor.

Last season, Turner scored over 30 points in ten games, averaging 23.9 points and 12.5 rebounds. He was named to the first All-State team by the Bloomington Herald-Telephone but, as many other southern Indiana stars, was ignored when it came time to select the Indiana All-Star team.

It is doubtful that the All-Star team pollsters were aware that Turner averaged over 60 percent from the field during his high school career--63 percent as a senior.

A business major, Turner is glad to be a part of the Sycamore success in 1978-79 and Coach Bill Hodges plans on having Turner play a more major part in future successful seasons. By Mike McCormick

Wherever he goes, Meat Loaf dominates the action—just on his super-size alone! In this backstage photo, he's surrounded by Mick Ronson, Karis DeVito, Ellen Foley and Ian Hunter. But no one ever resents Meat Loaf's presence because there's so much of him to love!

"LOVE" MAY HELP YOU WIN GINO'S NEW ALBUM!

"Love" is one of a dictionary of words which you can make out of Gino Vannelli's beautiful, twelve-letter name. If you can make four more words, then you can be in the running for a free copy of his new A&M million-selling album, "Brother to Brother."

"I Just Wanna Stop" brought Gino to the attention of everyone—his loyal fans who have stayed with him for six albums and new listeners who suddenly fell in love with his gentle voice. Now that he's moved into the world of superstardom, Gino promises not to change. (He won't even shave more often!)

"Vain" is another word you can make out of his name, but it doesn't apply to Gino. Even the title of his album suggests Gino's commitment to brotherhood—and there's no room for ego when you want to make the world a better place to live.

4 WEEKS OF

#1: PAUL STANLEY

This is SuperScene's first series of close-ups. It's only fitting that KISS is our subject, because it has caused more excitement among SuperScene's readers than any other group. Our series begins with Paul today, and will continue for the next three weeks as we cover Ace, Peter and Gene.

Album Management by agreement with Kiss

The most obvious clue to understanding Paul is the star on his face. Paul's always dreamed of becoming a star, and KISS' super-success allows him to live like one—complete with his silver and burgundy Rolls Royce.

His real name is Paul Eisen, and he co-founded the group with Gene Simmons late in 1973.

He could live on Japanese food, but can't go on stage without munching a candy bar first. It takes him nearly an hour to put on his make-up.

He loves being the group's "love object," but his commitment to Cher is very real. Like the other members of the group, he works hard, stays in shape, and believes that entertainment is what KISS is all about.

Another in-between chorus of the Robin Hood to Charles Manson blues

By Ron LaRoche

Director William Friedkin turns from his usual (and effective) seriousness to punch up his latest movie with humor in the current cinematic example of the "the bad guys are really good old boys" syndrome.

"The Brink's Job" takes comedic license with the actual Boston Brink's robbery which netted approximately 2.7 million dollars January 17, 1950. Members of the gang served almost 14 years each and were released. J. Edgar Hoover (portrayed broadly in the movie by Sheldon Leonard) and the F.B.I. spent more than 28 million in trying to crack the case. About $50,000 of the loot was eventually recovered. The gang was rounded up and finally sent to prison only after one member (in jail on a petty theft charge) informed on the rest of the gang five days before the statute of limitations would have run out.

Friedkin turns Peter Falk about three degrees from his TV character of Columbo to have him portray Tony Pino, a small-time booster who puts together a gang for the big Brink's heist, six years after running into a problem with chickens in another Boston robbery.

Brother-in-law Vinnie Costa (Allen Goorwitz who has gone back to his real name after using Garfield in some fine supporting roles such as in "Nashville") supplies most of the "stupid" humor as a bungler who causes more problems than needed. The one hilarious scene (the opening is funny) finds him swimming in a sea of two tons of gumballs.

Others in the fine supporting cast include Paul Sorvino as a slick bookmaker with silk scarves and camel's hair coats, Warren Oates as an aging and seedy demolitions expert, and Peter Boyle as the calculating and needed money man.

The idea of ripping Brinks comes when Pino notices the lethargic and uncaring manner of the guards, a slothfulness only matched by the company's cheapness in their security measures. Further amazement comes when he breaks (actually strolls) in after hours and finds neither guards nor alarms. Specs' idea of busting the safe open with a cannon loses the vote and they decide to go in "on the heavy"---armed robbery.

The slick movie moves at an energetic pace with more human characters than any of Friedkin's other movies, except "The French Connection." But I am still more than tired of movies that make heroes of crooks. "The Great Train Robbery" takes care of the English good bad guys of a century ago; "The Brink's Job" takes care of modern American good bad guys. Given a choice twenty years from now, I would prefer not to see a movie about that humorous guy Charlie Manson and his merry band of pranksters.

(Recommended for adults only, because of its glorification of crooks. Indiana Theatre.)

St. Benedict's survived great fire

By Frances E. Hughes

Next June 18, it will be 80 years since the dedication of St. Benedict's Church, then declared by experts as being the finest church in the State of Indiana and one of the finest in the country.

Next July 30, it will be 49 years since the disastrous fire at the church, which very nearly destroyed it.

But it still stands, recently restored again, as one of Terre Haute's very finest buildings.

St. Benedict's congregation was originally composed entirely of German immigrants. It was in January of 1864 that the German Catholics, small in number at the time, had three meetings for the purpose of discussing the feasibility of building a church of their own. They had previously attended services at St. Joseph's Church.

When the Rev. Fintan Mundwiller, OSB presided at the final of the three meetings, it was agreed to purchase a piece of property, the present site of St. Benedict's Church, where a church, school and parochial residence could be built. The entire block between Ohio and Walnut streets on South Ninth Street was purchased.

For this purpose, St. Boniface's Building Society was organized, and on Oct. 2, 1864, the cornerstone for the original St. Benedict's Church facing Ohio Street, was laid. The following year, the church was dedicated. Shortly thereafter, a school and parish house were erected.

The Benedictine fathers immediately assumed charge of the church, and the success of the German Catholics here was greatly due to their untiring zeal and energy.

In December, 1865, the Rev. C. Doebbenner was appointed pastor, succeeding the Benedictines in administration of the Parish until 1867. In April of that year, the Rev. Edward Faller became pastor of the Parish, proving an able administrator and also assisting the parish with means of his own. His successor from 1871 to 1872 was the Rev. N. Gaelwellor.

Franciscan Fathers of the "Order of Minor Conventuals" then took charge of the parish, and the first Franciscan to come here was the Rev. Pius Kotterer, OMC, who served from 1872 to 1877. During his pastorate, the church was enlarged.

Ill health caused the resignation of the next two pastors -- the Rev. Conrad Elison, who served from 1877 to 1880, and the Rev. Fidelis M. Voight, who resigned after six months.

The Rev. Clemens Luitz, served from 1880 to 1883; the Rev. Mauritius Biel, for two years, the Rev. Avelinus Szabo for a year, and then the Rev. Bonaventure Zoller, for three years.

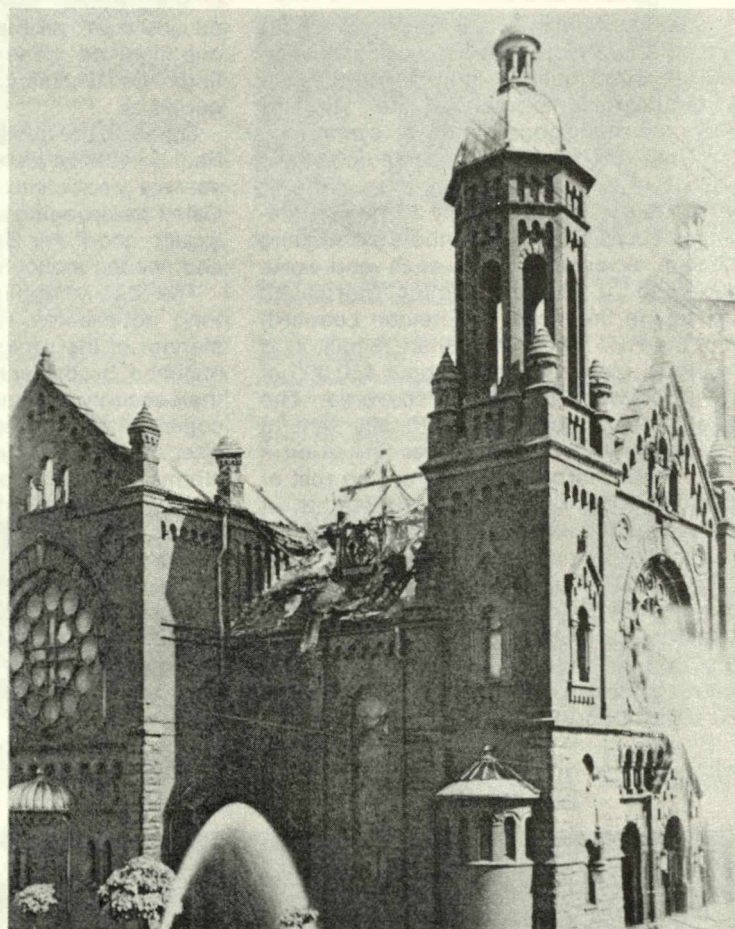

It was during the administration of the Reverend Zoller that the present school house on the corner of Ninth and Walnut streets was built at a cost of $26,000. The cornerstone was laid June 12, 1887. Sisters of Providence staffed the school and living quarters were provided for them in the school.

On the building committee were Herman Hulman, Sr., (grandfather of the late Anton Hulman, Jr.) Frank Prox, John F. Brinkman and Joseph Frisz. Two hundred children attended the school at first to receive instructions both in English and German languages.

The Rev. Zoller was succeeded by the Rev. Leonard Reich, who was there from 1889 to 1892. The Rev. C. Schroun was pastor next and it was during his administration that the present beautiful church, dedicated to St. Benedict, was built. Added to the building committee were Ernest Bleemel, John Dommershausen, Anthony Haring and August Fox. Hulman was president.

The decision to build the new church was made March 31, 1896, and a month later, demolition of the old church was started. Ground was broken July 21 and the cornerstone laid on Oct. 4 with the Rt. Rev. Francis Chatard, DD, bishop of Vincennes, presiding. On Nov. 6, 1898, three new bells were blessed by Msgr. Bessonies. Dedication ceremonies for the new $150,000 church were held June 18, 1899. The Rt. Rev. John Janssen, DD, Bishop of Belleville, presided at the services. Combined choirs of the parish sang the Mass with Miss Anna Hulman as organist.

The German sermon for the occasion was preached during the Pontifical High Mass by the Very Rev. Dr. Louis Miller, OMC Prov., and the English address was delivered by the Rt. Rev. Bishop O'Donaghue, DD, administrator of the diocese, during the Pontifical Vespers.

1930 fire destroyed church.

The general contractor for the red pressed brick edifice, the entire cost of which was $150,000 was C. H. McCormack and Company, Columbus, Ind. A W. W. Kimball and Company, Chicago, organ was installed, and the statuary, with the exception of the Crucifixion, was made by one of Europe's greatest sculptors, Mr. Schmieman of Muenster, Westphalia. The Crucifixion group about the high altar was made by a noted sculptor, Joseph Sibbell of New York City.

To Zukotynski of Chicago, a Russian nobleman by birth, painted the "Salus-Mundi" painting over the high altar, the frescoing and decorative paintings were done by G. Heppinger of Milwaukee and the bells were furnished by the Meneely Bell Company of Troy, N.Y. Candelabras and candlesticks were imported from Russia and Germany.

The next need of the parish was for a new rectory, so in 1900, Architect Vrydagh was engaged for that project. By then, the Rev. Schroun had been succeeded, for his second pastorate, by the Rev. Zoller in 1899. The present rectory was built at a cost of $9,500 and was completed in December of 1900.

There was still a need for a convent for the Sisters, so in 1915 the Finkbiner residence on the southwest corner of Ninth and Ohio streets was purchased as a home for the nuns.

In the years following World War I, St. Benedict's Parish flourished. It had numerous societies with spiritual, recreational and social programs.

Then, suddenly, disaster struck on July 30, 1930, when fire came near to completely destroying the beautiful church. Although no cause was officially determined, it was thought that it was accidentally started by painters who were working on the great center dome.

Although the firemen did all they could to save the structure, when the fire was finally extinguished, only the walls were left standing. The loss was estimated at $500,000.

At the time of the fire, the Very Rev. Seraphin Schlang, was pastor of the church. From the second pastorate of the Reverend Zoller from 1899 to 1908, those who served St. Benedict's as pastors were the Revs. Ferdinand Mayer, 1906-1916; Stephen Kortas, 1916-1926 and Philip Friedman, 1926-1929.

During the fire, the great bronze statue of St. Michael which was atop the center dome, plunged downward through the blazing roof. The entire copper covered dome and roof collapsed into the interior of the church, destroying the fine sculpture and paintings there.

Members of the congregation and friends offered money or gave their pledges to contribute to the rebuilding of St. Benedict's. On December 31, 1931, Bishop Joseph Chartrand of Indianapolis officiated at dedication ceremonies. The church looked much as it had before on the exterior except that the expense of rebuilding the center dome was so high that it had to be eliminated.

Nor was it possible to refurbish and redecorate the interior in all its former splendor. Since the nation was in the throes of the Great Depression at that time, it was indeed a great feat to be able to rebuild the church.

The three large circular "rose" stained glass windows in the north, south and west walls of the building were replaced. The west one is said to be one of the largest in the Midwest. Every other small circular window in the circumference of each of the three windows depicts a Biblical character, as do the four in the center. There are 12 of these around the outer edge and four in between the bars of the center cross.

New vaulted and arched ceilings were painted with designs and small scenes since the interior frescoes and murals were destroyed.

Also replaced, although in simpler design, were the four large marble columns, the large main altar and two smaller side altars in the interior. There are also seven small stained glass windows in the curved wall back of the altar, and other stained glass windows in the side walls and above the main entrance. A large reproduction of the famous "Pieta" is to the right of the main entrance.

A few years ago, red carpet was installed in the church, and sound-absorbing tile was applied to the side and back walls.

Every 10 years since the fire, a transparent protective coating is applied to the exterior corner columns, base and trim of Michigan limestone of the building. It was done last summer.

Pastors following the Reverend Schlang were the Revs. Anthony Hodapp, 1933-35; Theodore Eicholtz, 1922-28; Lambert Graf, 1942-48; Bruno Lindenmaier, 1948-54; Wenceslaus Hertvig, 1954-1960, and Benedict Rubeck, 1960-1966, during whose pastorate the Centennial of the church was celebrated with three special services and events during the week of May 23-29, 1965.

The Rev. Aiden Witte became pastor in 1966 but became ill and in January of 1967, the Rev. Arthur Young came to the church as administrator while the Rev. Witte took a leave of absence. In June of 1968, Father Witte returned and stayed until September.

He was succeeded as pastor by the Rev. Germain Belen, who was there until 1976. The Rev. Joseph Herp followed for six months, after which the present pastor, the Rev. Hubert Kobrunski, OFM Conv., assumed the pastorate.

In June of 1970, the school was closed, and the school building was remodeled. Two rooms were made into Hellman Hall, which was dedicated in June of 1971 as a large room for meetings and receptions, where parish activities could be held. The room was paneled, the ceiling lowered and a sliding door installed.

One room was also made into a kitchen, one into a small chapel, one reserved for religious education classes and two restrooms were installed.

After the closing of the school, the convent also was closed and was empty for a few months. Then, William Balduzzi, choir director and organist of the church for the past 36 years, moved into the building. It is now his residence and studio.

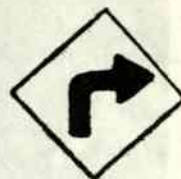

St. Benedict's Parish, one of the oldest in the city, is one in which the city can take much pride and its church is one of the finest, not only in the city but in the state.

Is Bird to slow for superstardom?

The following are excerpts from a story written by Ted Green of the Los Angeles Times after a visit to Terre Haute to watch Larry Bird and the ISU team play.

By Ted Green
Los Angeles Times

Jerry West calls him one of the smartest players he's ever seen.

An NBA general manager says that even though he's a rare commodity—a potential white star—"You'd make a great effort to get him if he were green."

Tulsa coach Jim King says, "He's so much ahead of the average player in his thinking, anticipation and understanding of the game. He could easily start in the pros right now."

Pro scouts describe him as a combination of Rick Barry and Pete Maravich, and they're supposedly not exaggerating. Consensus is that he's by far America's best college player.

By now nearly everyone, at least in the insular world of basketball, is talking about Larry Bird, the 6-9 1/2 All-American forward whose scoring, rebounding and remarkable passing has led Indiana State University to a 23-0 record and No. 1 ranking in one wire-service poll... and in the process put his town on the sports map.

In college basketball, the Bird is the word.

But, curiously, the word hasn't really spread the way you'd expect—for several reasons.

One is that Bird, a quiet private Indiana country boy to begin with, virtually stopped talking about himself publicly this season on the grounds that he's been misquoted and misunderstood. Thus ISU's sports information director has spent much of the winter explaining Bird's silence and trying to mollify the slew of out-of-town reporters who've come here hoping for the interview that's never granted.

On the other hand Bird does occasional TV interviews (he says TV can't change his words), so who knows?

"I don't make any excuses for him," sports information director Ed McKee was saying the other day. "Sure, it presents a problem. A lot of press guys have left this office saying that Larry will get chewed up (by reporters) in the NBA."

Bird reportedly clammed up after one newspaper story in a roundabout way accused him of being money-hungry and after another alleged that his coach, Bill Hodges, was getting him out of tests at school. Bird and Hodges denied it and then Bird—who's sensitive about a lot of things, including talk that he's not exactly an academic All-American despite a B average in physical education—began making like a basketball Garbo, saying he wanted to be left alone.

"Basketball is my whole life and it will always be my whole life," Bird said. "I'm a lot smarter on the court than I am in life." More recently he told a friend he relished the idea of playing basketball three nights a week in the pros. "But I don't know about the rest of it," he said.

If Bird, 22, has matured greatly since his unsettling times—and nearly everyone close to him agrees that he has—he still remains something of an enigma even here, where they worship the ground he flies over.

The same young man who jumped into his car and drove off instead of joining his coaches and teammates at a recent postgame booster rally also once accidentally knocked down a 9-year-old boy during a mad dash to the locker room, caught him before he hit the ground, swooped him into his arms and then carried him in to meet all the ISU players for handshakes, autographs and a free ball.

On the court, Bird tells his coach when he wants to come out for a rest but is, by all reports, as coachable as the 11th man at Podunk U.

Furthermore, Bird's statistics alone—29 points a game (No. 2 in the nation), 15 rebounds (No. 3) and six assists—have "star syndrome" written all over them. Yet people here say you'll never find a more unselfish, giving basketball player. The fact Bird is a star is what makes him really unusual in a sport suddenly rampant with Doctor Dunks, All-Worlds and in-your-face jump shooters. Julius Erving says that when George McGinnis and Lloyd Free played with him at Philadelphia, they specialized in the give-and-go. "Give me the ball and go to hell," Erving says. Well, give Bird the ball and go, and you get it back, even if you're averaging two points a game.

This appears to be one of many clues that the court is where the Bird is most secure and comfortable. It is, so to say, his nest, even though it's hard to hide in front of crowds numbering in the 10 thousands. All those fans can see, of course, is Larry Bird the basketball player and that, apparently, is exactly the way he wants it.

Judging by his performance during ISU's 100-75 win over West Texas State, and by testimony from his coaches and teammates, who all say that Bird is the best player and nicest guy they know, the Bird, in the lingo, is not into being the word. Because he's secure with his abilities and enjoys the game only when it's played by the book, he's into giving it (the ball) up.

And it is Bird's passing that sets him apart. His vision, timing, touch and judgment are extraordinary, so much so that at times they almost dwarf his other obvious skills—the slick, soft jump shot from nearly any distance; the size (215 pounds), strength, positioning know-how and willingness to mix it up inside, and the way he runs and works hard at both ends of the floor in a gliding, seemingly effortless way.

Bird is a forward (and a big one at that) but his style is such that you can't really classify him. One minute he's muscling for an offensive rebound, the next he's swishing a high-arch, fallaway 25-footer moving left, and the next he's middle man on the fast break, spotting cutters and hitting them with picture-perfect passes, often

Courage? It's growing rhododendrons in Indiana

By Mary Stevens

How often one reads a letter from a lonely person in an advice column. They usually ask how they can meet people. The answer is usually "Join a church group, become a volunteer, or give time to a political campaign." I agree that these methods beat cruising the swinging singles bars but I'd like to add "Join a gardening society."

When I saw a notice in the paper that the Indiana Chapter of the American Rhododendron Society was having a meeting on the ISU campus on February 10, I gave my family notice. On that Saturday, there would be no emergency laundry, dinner would be minimal, and I was not to be called out of the meeting unless the call came from a hospital emergency room. I had cabin fever that could only be relieved by a good dose of gardening.

The speaker for the meeting was John Wott, professor of horticulture at Purdue. Wott had been on sabbatical leave in England and northern Europe and was showing slides he had taken in the gardens he had visited. The slides were interesting but what was even more interesting were the people at the meeting.

I have a nodding acquaintance with Dr. Wott; I am sure that he doesn't know me from a wheat shock. The rest of the group were strangers; but they were as hospitable as any group could be. There were several of us who were guests and we were treated with utmost graciousness.

One of the men attending the meeting was a guest, a physician from Oregon. He obviously had extensive experience in the gardening field. When Wott showed a slide of a garden planned by the famous gardener 'Capability' Brown. (Old 'capability' believed that gardens should look as if nature had just done a superb job. It was under his direction that many of the fine formal English gardens were torn up and converted to pastoral informality.), this gentleman told of the fierce competition among gardeners of that time. One so desperately wanted to own a plant that grew only in the Vatican Gardens that he hatched a plan worthy of a CIA operation. (On second thought, his plan worked better than some CIA plans.)

This Willie Sutton of gardening petitioned for an audience with the Pope. In addition, he had a special dress made for his lovely daughter who was to accompany him to Rome. On the day of the audience, he and the beautiful young lady arrived very early at the Vatican. Because they were so early, the English "gentleman" suggested to the guard that they be allowed to see the garden --- just stroll through to pass the time.

The guard went with them into the garden but the heat was too much for the young girl all dressed up in her long skirts and bustle. She fainted, and the guard was begged by the distraught father to fetch a glass of water. When he left, the bustle was opened, a trowel was produced, and the rare plant was scooped into the "booster bustle."

This same guest congratulated the members of the group on having the courage to attempt growing rhododendrons in Indiana climate. As one who has struggled to get blooms after the past winters, I heartily agree with him. But the hope that somehow conditions will improve stimulates me to keep trying.

The Indiana chapter of the society is trying to recruit new members. You don't have to be a Rhododendron grower to belong. All you need to qualify for membership is an interest in gardening.

If any of you would like to join this group, you can get more information by calling Pat Tatum at the ISU chemistry department or Paul Swander, 1741 No. Tenth Street. The dues are twelve dollars a year.

This adds up to only a dollar a month to become part of a very interesting group of people. That's cheaper than going to a disco --- and you won't have to worry about suffering hearing loss!

THIS WEEK ---

Florists' azaleas are some of the most rewarding houseplants if given proper care. They need to be kept cool and in bright light --- not hot sun. Don't let the roots dry and wash the foliage after the flowers have faded. Pick off all flowers when they have passed their prime.

With the longer days and bright sun, many houseplants are beginning to put on new growth. Start giving them a little diluted fertilizer.

Cinerarias are being shown in plant displays now but they are not cheap. If you wish to buy one, keep in mind that they are annuals and will have to be discarded after they bloom. If your budget is low, you would be better off purchasing another plant, perhaps an African violet.

while seemingly looking in some other direction. Maybe the only classification that makes any sense is that Bird is a guard in a forward's body — struggling to escape yet knowing that he could never survive if he did.

You see, Bird is slow — very slow, frankly — and so he learned, apparently long ago that to be most effective he'd have to combine and hone all his skills because one wouldn't be enough to get him by, at least not where he's always wanted to go.

"He's very, very good," the Lakers' West said after watching Bird from the Hulman Arena stands. "He just doesn't make any mistakes. Sometimes players are better when they don't try to do things they can't (such as, in Bird's case, consistently beating defenders one-on-one). Will he be a great pro? Honestly, I'm not sure."

The reservation is Bird's speed. One NBA coach here said Bird "will immediately join the slowest player's club." The same coach also said: "It's a shame he couldn't be faster and quicker. I can't even imagine how good he'd be if he were."

The bottom line? One guess is that Bird will make a good pro — maybe a very good one. But he isn't a franchise-maker (then again, who is?) What Bird is is a player-maker; his passing, especially, makes his teammates better.

Dave Cowens is among those who hope that Bird makes the Celtics better. Boston's player-coach was here, too, for his first in-person look at the club's No. 1 pick in the last draft. The Celtics waved the customary heavy cash at Bird but, saying a college degree was most important, he decided to return to school for his senior year. The Celtics have until June 24 to sign him. If they don't Bird's name goes back in the pool and another team will draft him the next day. The Lakers should then be in the running because they have New Orleans' No. 1 pick, and the Jazz and Detroit Pistons are tied for worst record in pro basketball.

"I was on my way to (a game in) San Antonio," Cowens said, "so I stopped here to answer any questions he (Bird) might have on our city, organization, players or my coaching philosophy."

Cowens brought two Celtics with him, Rick Robey and Jeff Judkins, presumably to help close the sale. Robey, who went to college at Kentucky, and Bird have known each other for years.

The three watched Bird play from courtside and generally must have liked what they saw. He had a typical night — 27 points, 19 rebounds, five assists and some other passes that brought to mind what ISU guard Carl Nicks always says, that the Bird will bound passes off your nose if you're not ready all the time.

But with Bird it isn't statistics you notice; his points and rebounds just kind of happen, always in context. Nor is it his physical presence; with skinny thighs, a big rear, prominent nose and a barely visible moustache below a mop of blond hair, and with a round mouth that obscures his teeth, Bird is not physically impressive. What he does on the court is. No. 33 in the baby blue and white ISU uniform has a mysterious, subtle kind of charisma, a — dare we say it — star quality.

"He's really a throwback," West said, and that said it all.

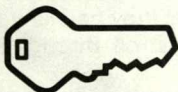

When the ISU student body started wearing "Bird-Watcher" T shirts to games, Bird said he was against them because "they should have the whole team on them." An insincerely, humble superstar number? Not likely. And when someone sent him an old rock 'n' roll record called "The Bird," by the Trashmen, Bird said he stuffed it in a drawer and never played it.

So forget the hype and hoopla. Just toss up that ball and watch your nose.

Clearly McCreery.

"The Larry Helman Agency has not strayed from its original purpose: real estate sales—residential, rural, lots, commercial and apartments." And purpose clearly helped George McCreery's personal involvement in the sale of more than a million dollars of real estate in 1978.

By Pat O'Bryan

Another distributional gem came up at the Bridge Center recently. Although North-South hold the edge in high card points by a 24 to 16 count, it's East-West that can make game in Hearts. That is, if North makes a normal opening lead. Marc Weinbaum and his partner reached the 4-Heart contract after North opened with a bid of one Diamond. And Marc made the contract although it seems, from looking at all the cards, as if North-South should be able to get a Club trick in addition to two Spades and the Ace of trumps -- Hearts.

West		North	East
S--10 2		S--A K J 8	S--Q 9 7 6 4
H--J 10 9 5 3		H--Q 8	H--K 7 6 4 2
D--K 8 7		D--Q 5 3 2	D--None
C--8 6 2		C--Q 10 7	C--A K 3
		South
		S--5 3
		H--A
		D--A J 10 9 6 4
		C--J 9 5 4

The bidding:

North	East	South	West
1-D	Dbl	3-D	3-H
3-S	4-H	Pass	Pass

Marc's courageous bid of three Hearts with only a King and a Jack in high cards, got his side into the good Heart game contract. West's double of the opening Diamond call was very good, since he held five card support in both majors. South's call of three Diamonds could have been even higher, on account of his shortness in Spades and Hearts. Some of the pairs even went to five Diamonds after East-West arrived at four Hearts in order to save the game. This contract, of course, was defeated only 1 trick, for a good result. By the way, if East does not double the opening bid, South might call 3 Diamonds inviting opener to go 3 No-Trump, but this would not work out at all well. North-South's only make is four Diamonds.

North started the defense with a lead of the Spade King, and declarer was finally able to set up a Spade in dummy for the discard of a losing Club. After the Spade King defender led a small Diamond. Marc could not afford to lose a Diamond, so he was forced to ruff, and he then made the good lead of a Spade from Dummy, although this was back into North's Ace-Jack combination. Now Marc had the timing to set up a Spade before his two stops in Clubs were gone. An opening lead of a Club would have defeated the contract, but there is no good reason, visible, for North to make such a lead.

The following pairs were named winners in duplicate games at the Bridge Center during the week past:

Thursday Afternoon, Feb. 15: 1st, Lester Wolf-Fred Ervin; 2nd, Anne and Maurice Nugent; 3rd, Jenny Davis-Jim Kelly; 4th Polly Hicks-Sunny Staff.

Thursday Night, Feb. 15, Ninety-Niners: 1st, Evelyn Bach-Nancy Pillon; 2nd, 3rd (tie): Virginia Stipp-Gary Walker and Cora Lee and Jerry Huntsman.

Friday, Feb. 16, anet Horton-Jim Kelly; 2nd, Lester Wolf-Frank DeSanto; 3rd Marianne and Bill Ruffer.

Saturday, Feb. 17: 1st, Sue May-Doris Wetzel; 2nd, Alberta and Fred Ervin; 3rd, Jerry Huntsman-Milt Van Reed; 4th, Dorothy Stein-Jim Kelly; 5th and 6th (tie): Jane Gormong-Janet Horton and Hazel Davis-Laura Soder.

Novice, Tuesday Afternoon, Feb. 20: 1st, Mabel Hargis-Rosella Hartman; 2nd, Mary Giffel-Barbara Schaff; 3rd, Mary Jane Stanton-Marian Morton.

Tuesday Night, Feb. 20: 1st, Gerry Matsumoto-Dave Boxley; 2nd and 3rd (tie): Janet Horton-Richard Easton and Evelyn Bach-M. Marshall; 4th, Jenny Davis-Alberta Ervin; 5th, Dorothy Stein-Polly Hicks.

Intensity should be his middle name

By Mike McCormick

The Chicago Public League has been a haven for college recruiters for many years.

Three years ago, two of the best were Ronnie Lester of Carver and Carl Nicks of Englewood. Lester went to Iowa where he is setting the Big Ten on fire. Nicks, who finished about two-points behind Lester, average-wise, in the league scoring race matriculated to Indiana State and his presence has ignited a flame in the Missouri Valley Conference.

Early in the season, a veteran metropolitan sportswriter---frustrated at his inability to get an interview with Larry Bird---quoted Nicks as saying, "Bird is the most unselfish All-American I've ever played with or against." The quote was accurate but the writer derided it by saying that Bird was the only All-American Nicks had ever been exposed to.

Not true.

In Chicago, on the playgrounds and the hardwood, Nicks played with and against a number of college greats: Maurice "Bo" Ellis of Marquette, Rickey Green of Michigan, Larry Williams of Louisville, Sonny Parker of Texas A & M, Jeff Wilkins of Illinois State, Steve Krafcsin of Iowa, Levi Cobb of Illinois, Arnette Hallman of Purdue, Robert Bird of Marquette and countless others. The competition is stiff.

The quick, muscular guard is on the brink of greatness himself. Former Boston Celtic Coach Tom Heinsohn compared Nicks with Lloyd Free of San Diego and predicted that professional scouts would be knocking at his door next year.

"I considered that a real compliment," Nicks confessed, "but I really try to model myself after Ron Lee (now of the New Orleans Jazz). He puts 110 percent into his game and he's left-handed."

Few Sycamore fans would say that Nicks puts any less of himself into his game.

With his quickness, agility and strength, many have suggested that Carl should have chosen football or track over basketball. Oddly enough, he has never been timed in the sprints, except on the basketball floor. "One time I was timed for one end of the court to the other in three seconds," he admitted.

If his speed is unknown, the origin of his unorthodox southpaw shooting style is an enigma. "Even in high school, my coaches tried to get me to change my shooting form. But, if I keep my arms like you are supposed to, I can't hit. Maybe I shoot that way because of the way I'm built. I walk with my arms out," Nicks pointed out.

Shooting, and scoring, has never been a problem for the 6-2 1/2 junior. He averaged over 24 points a game as a high school senior and 22.8 last season at Gulf Coast in the Rapid Fire division of the Florida junior college league. This season he is hovering around the 20-point mark.

But shooting is only part of Carl's game. He ranks third on the team in assists and frequently electrifies the crowd with bullet-like passes to a man in scoring position. Surprisingly, he is also third on the team in rebounding and has an impressive number of dunks for his size. His quickness permits him to be a good defensive player and he stands second on the team in steals. It is no wonder that The Carl Nicks Fan Club received notoriety upon his arrival at the Terre Haute campus as a freshman.

So far the personal highlight of his college career is the clutch shot he hit late in the Illinois State game to help the Sycamores past the Redbirds, 78-76. He also calls Ron Jones of the "other ISU" the best offensive player he has confronted.

There have been other big moments for him, though. Like the night Carl got 30 points for Englewood against Martin Luther King, which had just beaten No. 1 ranked Phillips. That was particularly important because it was the first time his mother and brother had ever seen him play.

His parents, Rev. and Mrs. Oscar Nicks, see him frequently now and were present last Sunday for the Wichita State game. His father is the minister of the Mount Moriah Missionary Baptist Church in south Chicago.

His religious background has helped him: "It taught me how to relate to people. I suppose some people might think I'm 'too good' because of my religious training, but I'm not that way."

Coach Bill Hodges would like to start an Englewood tradition at ISU. Learando Drake, Englewood's present star 6-7 forward, was visiting here last weekend, two days after he was named to the all-Chicago Public League squad. He and Nicks are good friends.

If Drake has the same competitive quality as his friend Carl Nicks, the "Learando Drake Fan Club" may be the next organization on campus.

Brad Miley He's coming back!

By Mike McCormick

The locker room was tense.

The pressure of a 20 game winning streak was making one of its rare appearances.

National media was requesting constant attention from the Indiana State coaching staff and the players.

Professional scouts were flocking around the Sycamores.

Coach Bill Hodges decided it was time for a serious discussion with his squad as to how to handle the situation. He spoke and the players gave him their undivided respect. He finished and there was a long pause.

From the back of the room, a voice broke the silence: "I don't care how much they offer me, coach. I'll be back next year."

The pressure broke. The speaker was Brad Miley, a 6-8 junior from Rushville, whose offensive skills have occasionally been suspect but whose value to the team as a defensive expert and rebounder have never been questioned.

Except when the Sycamores face a 7-2 center like Purdue's Joe Barry Carroll, Miley has been charged with defending against the opposing team's offensive whiz. "Defense has become a challenge to me. I like to guard the other team's best player to see how good I can do," said Miley recently. Ask prolific scorers in the Missouri Valley Conference how good Miley does. Bradley's Roger Phegley and Drake's Wayne Kreklow, for instance, have found out that Miley can do very well indeed.

Rebounding is another one of Brad's assets. Though he has frequently played second fiddle to teammates Larry Bird and DeCarsta Webster, Miley has been averaging better than six board a game. As a high school senior, he broke George McGinnis' rebounding records in the Indiana State basketball finals.

This year, and next, Coach Bill Hodges is counting upon Brad assuming a leadership role. He can score, too, if left alone as his 17-point effort against Tulsa in the Home Box Office game-of-the-week will attest.

Even if his shooting style resembles "a sore-armed shot putter."

Fred Taylor's Midwest Basketball magazine gave Miley a compliment last week by acknowledging his tireless efforts on the floor. The nephew of local resident Mark LaGrange (former Schulte basketball coach and now proprietor of Mark's Par Three Golf Course) laughs off his offensive skills: "I have to play defense. After all, what else can I do?"

A cage journey to Terre Haute

Editor's note: The following is an excerpt from a story by Boston Globe reporter Mike Madden who came to Terre Haute to see the Indiana State University basketball team play during a week of traveling around the country.

By Mike Madden
Boston Globe

So there I was in High Ground (that's English for Terre Haute), not too high about the Wabash River, parking the Rent-a-Guzzler directly in front of the home of Eugene V. Debs and deep in thought.

Not to mention snow.

Do you think, self said to self, Eugene V. Debs might have dropped his socializing for the night and headed across the street to the gym to see Larry Bird play?

Naw, he probably would have picketed the game.

Or maybe he didn't care about Birds at all.

The question was posed to a woman standing in front of Debs house, now an official State of Indiana historical landmark. "Who gest more people, Eugene V. Debs or Larry Bird?"

"We only get a few stragglers here," the woman said. "They get more in one night over there at the game than we do in a year. Who is this Larry Bird, anyway?"

"He's a basketball player."

"I see."

I don't think she did.

The sign read, "Welcome to Terre Haute, the seat of Vigo County."

Just one look and the conclusion couldn't be avoided, their seat was early American, possibly antique.

Or just junkie.

It had snowed in Terre Haute two days earlier and it was snowing again. So it was time to revive an old story, the one they tell in Terre Haute every year after the first big snowball falls from the sky.

The city streets, as usual, were an ice rink, untouched by sand or plow, a condition the residents accepts without a grain of salt. It wasn't always that way. A while back, concerned residents brought the matter of snow removal to Mayor Lee Larrison. Said Larrison: "God brought the snow and God will take it away."

But that was before Larry Bird. Now Terre Haute spends its summers waiting for the winter. And tonight thousands of people are driving where plows feared to tread, slip-sliding along to the Hulman Center, the only building in downtown High Ground that seems to have been built after the troops returned from Gettysburg.

As usual, the Hulman Center is packed with the 10,529 Bird-watchers, so much so that the St. Louis Cardinals are in Terre Haute for the day, manager Ken Boyer, general manager John Claiborne and players Ted Simmons, Mark Littell and Steve Swisher.

"I wasn't too sure I wanted to go on this caravan," says Simmons. "But when I heard that we'd be going to Terre Haute the day Larry Bird was playing, well, that made up my mind."

But the Cardinals are dispatched to the very last row at the very top of the arena. And behind the basket, no less.

"These season ticket-holders don't like to give up their seats," said one ISU fan. "Besides, the Cardinals were no good last year. That's where they belong."

Bird plays up to snuff against Southern Illinois. He scores 31 points, including seven in the final three minutes, as the Sycamores win, 88-79. Bird seems worth the praise of St. John's coach Lou Carnesecca, who has said, "They're going to have to open two banks when he signs with the pros."

But with whom will Bird sign? Bill Hodges, his coach, first gives the stock answers that he will sign with the Boston Celtics, or whomever gives Bird the most money. But then he says he wants to go off the record and Hodges says in a low voice, almost a whisper.

"You know what the smartest thing the Celtics did was?" says Hodges.

Get rid of Sidney Wicks?

"Gettin' that Rick Robey. Larry's good friends with that

How do you strike that spark?

By Carolyn Morgan

What is there about Indiana basketball hysteria that would cause a 40-year-old wife and mother to risk life and limb through ice, snow, blizzards, to juggle schedules and virtually plan her family's life around the ISU basketball schedule?

Should we go to the opening of the new play at Community Theatre? I don't know. Let me check the schedule. No, sorry. We will have to make it another night. You know I have a meeting that night. I guess Community Theatre can survive without us.

What do you suppose people in their towns talk about during the winter? Is there anything more important happening in the world than whether your school is ranked number one, two, or three in the basketball polls? Where's Iran? And have you noticed how expert the amateur can become when talking about the favorite player or players?

Since when does the average woman age 30-50 read Sports Illustrated, Basketball Weekly and the sports page of every newspaper before grabbing up Better Homes and Gardens, Good Housekeeping and the women's page?

All of these things have been happening in Terre Haute, Ind., since the coming of Larry Bird to Indiana State University three years ago.

Even persons who have no special ties to ISU and who have come to Indiana from other states have been privileged to watch the exciting game of the nation's most complete ballplayer and have become such avid fans that a snide remark about "where is Terre Haute" evokes the defensive juices that weren't evident before.

This woman has a dream... how does one go about meeting the super bird? How do you find out what inspires a young man to become the nation's number one basketball player? Natural ability, true. But from whence comes the determination to be really good? How to introduce this young man to the eleven-year-old son to instill this flame of excellence? Should she pass up this once in a lifetime chance to say of Larry Bird, professional basketball player, when said son collects the basketball card with his picture on it, "Oh yes, I knew him. He played . . ."

Finally, both wire service opinion polls placed Indiana State University on top on February 27, the day after the Sycamores completed regular season play with a record of 26 wins and no defeats. Two weeks earlier, ISU had ranked first in the AP poll, but this was the first time the Sycamores made it to the top in both.

Bird could rise in career ranking

Where will Larry Bird end up in the all-time NCAA career scoring rankings?

After last Tuesday night's game against West Texas State, Bird ranked sixth behind the University of Houston's Otis Birdsong. Bird had scored 162 less than Birdsong, who is currently playing for the Kansas City Kings. Depending on how far the Sycamores get in post season play, Bird could pass up Birdsong, and maybe even Elvin Hayes, also of Houston.

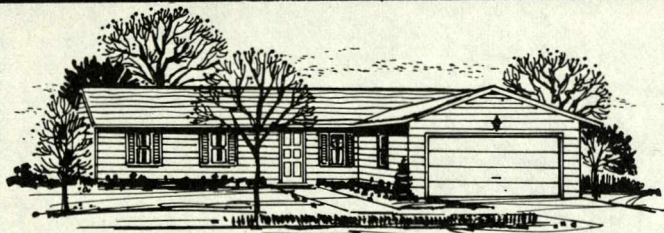

But it is unlikely he will catch third place holder Oscar Robertson, also a Missouri Valley Conference product from then-member University of Cincinnati.

The rankings:

	Games	Points	Average
1. Pete Maravich, LSU '70	83	3,667	44.2
2. Freeman Williams, Portland St. '78	106	3,249	30.7
3. Oscar Robertson, Cincinnati '60	88	2,973	33.8
4. Elvin Hayes, Houston '68	93	2,884	31.0
5. Otis Birdsong, Houston '77	116	2,832	24.4
6. LARRY BIRD, INDIANA STATE '79	87	2,669	30.6

Eric Curry 'Big E' means emotion

The call him the "Big E."
And the way he plays and practices, the "E" may stand for "Emotion" rather than his given name, "Eric."

Eric Curry saw his playing career hampered in one of the first games of the season when he broke his right wrist. If he had not suffered that setback, he doubtless would have played a lot more than he has.

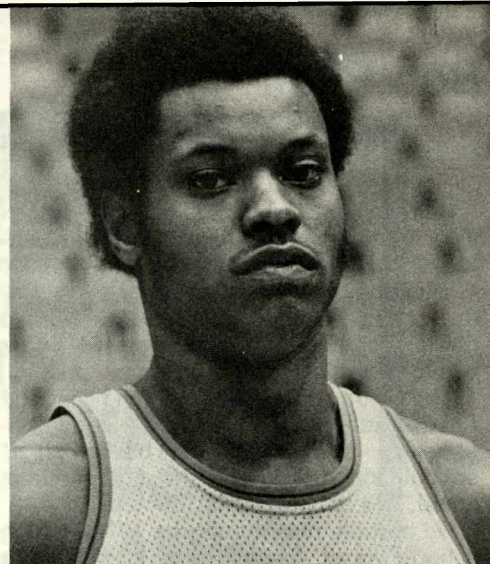

But, Curry did not let that setback dampen his spirit and enthusiasm. He leads the bench corps in encouragement and slaps on the back.

The 6-9 junior from Madame Curie High School in Chicago is capable. He was the leading scorer and rebounder on Coach Jay Harrington's Wabash Valley Junior College team, where he teamed with Rick Nemcek.

He has quickness and good jumping ability, which make him an important part in Coach Bill Hodges' future plans. And, he is quick to announce his goal for 1978-79: Win the NCAA championship and finish the season 32-0.

It is that kind of goal from the bench that has brought Indiana State a winning season. By Mike McCormick

Rod McNelly Choosing is not easy

Ironically, the best punter at Indiana State next fall may not be participating on the gridiron for Coach Dick Jamieson's Sycamores.

Rod McNelly, instead, will be preparing for the 1979-80 basketball season.

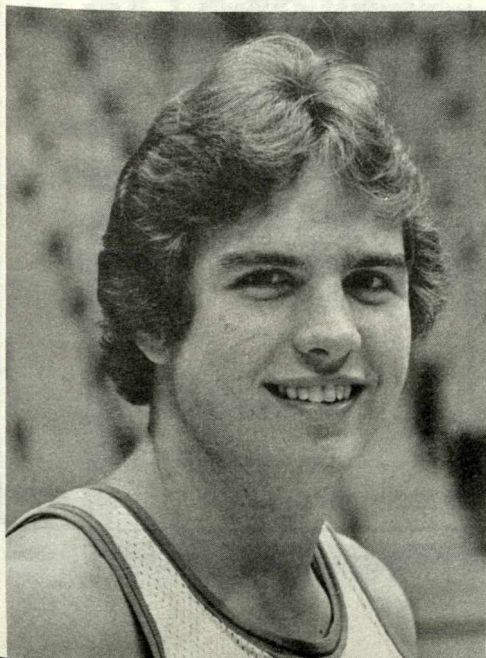

The 6-2 freshman from Speedway, like many other outstanding athletes, was forced to choose his favorite sport. An all-state selection in football, where he gained the reputation of being a college punter, McNelly chose to take his chances as a basketball "walk-on" at ISU.

His bid was successful and the likeable former Sparkplug has been in awe of the team's successes. Day in and day out, McNelly has been forced to compete at full speed against the nation's No. 1 team as a member of the "White" squad. What better learning experience could one have?

When it comes to learning, McNelly stands at the top of the class. A member of the high school honor society, Rod was president of his junior and senior class at Speedway. He is the type of leader that Coach Bill Hodges likes to have around.

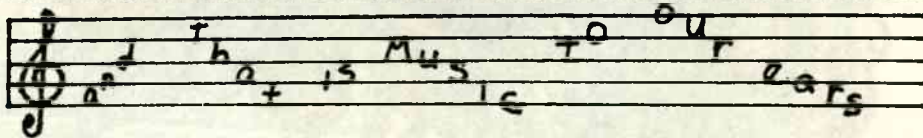

A business administration major, McNelly scored his first field goal as a Sycamore in the regular season finale against Wichita State before a national television audience. It won't be his last.

Tex is specialist for century mark

Being a coach's son has not always been easy for Indiana State junior Bob "Tex" Ritter.

When he played for his father, J. W. Ritter, at Indianapolis Northwest he worked harder so that neither he nor his father would be criticized for nepotism.

The extra work paid off and he and Coach Ritter have maintained a good relationship. "We always left basketball at school and didn't talk about it much at home," he recalls.

He proudly remembers the 1975-76 high school season when he led Northwest to the Indianapolis city title and his dad was named City-County Coach-of-the-Year. It was that year that Ritter tossed in 30 points against No. 1 Indianapolis Tech.

As a high school sophomore, the coach's son came off the bench to score 12 points and beat county titlist Pike Township.

After winning All-City and All-Sectional honors as a senior, Ritter spent a year at Hanover but did not like the style of play there. His second college season was spent under Coach Frank Loll at Olney (Ill.) Central Junior College. He netted 29 points in a big victory over Parkland.

Ritter chose Indiana State over other schools even though he had to make the squad as a "walk-on." "I'm glad I came here. Sure, I'd like to play more but, then, this year is a learning experience. It has been quite an experience to play with a great player like Larry Bird and against guards with quickness like Steve Reed and Carl Nicks."

Coach Bill Hodges is high on the 6-3 guard. He gives his best and plays just as hard as any starter in practice."

Known as Tex to his friends, Ritter admits being coined "The 100-Point man" after scoring the final baskets against Drake and West Texas State to put the Sycamores in triple figures.

Ritter doubts that coaching is in his future. "In order to be a coach, you must be a teacher. I think I'll eventually end up in business."

That should make some placement people happy. Ritter made the Academic All-State team as a high school senior. And, as Sycamore fans know, he is willing to accept any challenge. By Mike McCormick

'Sports Illustrated'--fair or foul to ISU?

By Sandy Barnard

A suggestion for your next party: if you're inviting ISU basketball Coach Bill Hodges, we think you might want to leave Sports Illustrated writer Bruce Newman off your guest list.

You see, even a month later, Hodges remains displeased about an article Newman wrote about the ISU team for the magazine's Feb. 5 issue.

A quick summary. Somewhere along the way during his Terre Haute research, Newman apparently indicated to Hodges that the article would concern the whole team, but as it happened, Newman focused almost entirely on All-America Larry Bird. Only Carl Nicks, among the other Sycamores, drew attention from Newman.

Plus, Newman suggested that the other players and Hodges himself "seem afraid of Bird". He also suggested that Hodges and former coach Bob King perhaps have let Bird have his own way too much. Finally, Newman cited several personal aspects of Bird's life off the court, particularly concerning the death of the ISU star's father a few years ago and some legal problems with his ex-wife.

No place for personal life

"They don't have a place in the article," Hodges maintained in a chat with us last week. He insisted that never again would he or his aides help out Sports Illustrated with any article.

Hodges' feelings were well-detailed by the local media within a few days of the Sports Illustrated article's publication. Of course, every story -- every issue -- has at least two and probably more sides. As it happened, we interviewed Newman in Terre Haute prior to his writing of the ISU article.

We found him to be a quiet, amiable, confident individual of 26, only 3 1/2 years out of Indiana University's School of Journalism. Already he has the plum college basketball beat for one of the nation's most prestigious sports publications.

We suspect that he, as an outsider far removed from the ISU basketball fever of recent weeks here, was merely calling things as he perceived them -- right or wrong -- during his five-day stint in Terre Haute researching the article.

We thought Newman's article, while heavy on Bird, was generally frank, well-written and interesting, although it offered only a new fact or two on Bird. For example, Newman may have been the first journalist to note in print, or on the air, that illness would force ex-coach King permanently off the bench. That was a story that local journalists, to the best of our knowledge, had not touched publicly.

(We include ourselves in that group inasmuch as we did not address the question of King's future in an early January article about Hodges in The Spectator.)

In Newman's favor we think we came away from the story understanding the man Larry Bird a little better. Thus, Newman may have been justified in including the personal aspects of Bird's life. However, having talked with Hodges recently, we also understand his point that perhaps they were unnecessary. As he told us, "I guess it's the difference between being the writer and a non-writer."

It may also reflect the difference in media attention between the hundreds of college seniors whose basketball careers are ending and one player of exceptional skills who Newsweek estimates may be worth $4 million to the pros.

The quiet man

Newman told us in the interview that he had originally intended to write about the team "because they're good. But the team is good because of Bird so it's going to be 75 percent about Bird." Once he changed the thrust of his article, he encountered a problem common for print journalists this season: Larry Bird is a modern-day Quiet Man. Facing his magazine's deadline, without Bird to talk to, Newman instead interviewed those around Bird -- teammates, coaches, other university athletic officials and his friends.

"I'd have loved to talk to Bird. But failing that you just try to get as many people who know something about him to trust you," the Evansville native explained in our late January interview. "I'm not real thrilled about it (Bird's silence). I don't want to let that affect my story." But he added, "A big part of the story" is that the nation's No. 1 college player doesn't talk to the press.

"I kind of like someone who tells the establishment, or people of some influence, to go to hell," Newman said, recalling also his admiration during his I.U. days for a similar anti-press attitude in I.U. Coach Bobby Knight. "I think that's good up to a point, but this (with Bird) is just foolish."

Newman termed it "counterproductive" for Bird, his team and especially for the university. One reason for a basketball program, he said, is "to promote goodwill for the university, and, in addition, to make some money. They also want to attract students."

(In the last two or three months probably no major national media outlet has filed to write about ISU. The resulting publicity bonanza, ISU officials agree, has stirred up considerable interest among ISU alumni.)

Fortress Mentality

Newman also told us that he found many people close to the ISU basketball program reluctant to talk about Bird. Using terms similar to those he included in his article, he said, "I think they are all afraid of him and are afraid of offending him."

Not content with saying just that, he added later that, in gathering his information at ISU, he was surprised by what he termed "the most pronounced fortress mentality I've ever run up against." He had an easier time at the White House getting information for a story about Jimmy Carter's taking up jogging.

At this point we'll suggest once again that you reconsider mixing Newman and ISU officials at your party.

In person, Newman certainly doesn't strike you as an individual seeking controversy for the sake of controversy. Despite his youth he has packed a lot of experience in a few years, beginning with working for the Evansville Press during several periods in high school and college. At I.U. he worked on the Indiana Daily Student, and one summer he worked for the fine sports department of the Boston Globe.

National Emphasis

Right out of college he went to S.I. magazine, a publication "I always wanted to work for" because of its national emphasis. During his college days he used to take a similar approach in his stories, often calling people all over the country for comments.

Initially at S.I. he worked as a researcher. Thirteen months ago he was promoted to staff writer, and early this year he took over the basketball beat (from Kent Hannon, who resigned to write books, including a projected one on ISU gymnast Kurt Thomas).

"I had read Sports Illustrated since I was a kid and I thought I could write better than that, or at least as well. I think if you sincerely believe that, and if you're right, then you have no reason not to think big."

He credits three factors with contributing to the general excellence of his magazine:

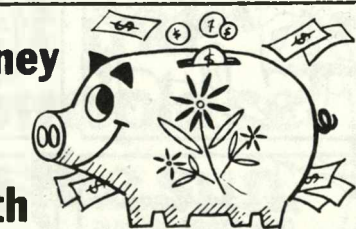

--Sports writing, in general, is better these days compared to the past when it was often "a graveyard for hacks who couldn't cut it elsewhere."

--Money influences all sports today and rubs off on sports-oriented publications. "Sports has become big business. Any time you have that much money involved . . . you attract good writers."

--The magazine generally appeals to sportsmen of widely varying interests -- from the fan of football and basketball to the fisherman and sailor.

He's happy with his job. "I'm not just saying this. I am where I always wanted to be," he said. "I've got a lot to learn but I'm learning it at the best place possible."

EGGS' AND 'EYES' FEATURED MUSEUM WORKSHOPS

An "Ojo de Dios" workshop and an "Egg Artistry" demonstration have been scheduled by the Friends of the Museum during the month of March.

On Monday, March 5, at 1 p.m., interested persons will learn the method of weaving "Ojos de Dios" commonly known as God's eyes. Woven with yarn on two sticks, the symbol is hung in Indian homes in Mexico, Central America and the southwestern United States. The form goes back thousands of years and has been found in many cultures. It is believed to protect and bless the family.

All interested persons are invited to attend. Each participant is asked to bring fabric scraps and a pair of scissors. Dowels will be provided. Helen Cuthbertson is chairman of the event.

An "Egg Artistry" demonstration will be presented by Audrey Jessell on Monday, March 19, at 1 p.m. Noted for her intricate decorated eggs, Jessell will show a variety of types and share her talents and experience with participants.

This event is the annual spring heritage demonstration sponsored each year by the Friends. Those attending will also have an opportunity to view the third annual Spring Tree which will be on display beginning Sunday, March 18.

Both events are scheduled in the Hulman Meeting Room. Additional details may be obtained by calling Dorothy Jerse during afternoon open hours at the museum.

HULMAN ORCHESTRA, SOVIET DANCERS COMING TO ISU

A symphony orchestra from Germany and a group of dancers from the Soviet Union are scheduled for performances at Indiana State University in March.

The National Deutsches Radio Symphony Orchestra, on its third tour in this country, makes a stop in Terre Haute for a Tuesday, March 6, appearance in Tilson Music Hall.

Zdenak Macal, who made his American debut in 1972 with the Chicago Symphony and has since conducted a number of major orchestras in the United States, conducts the symphony. It was founded in 1945.

A company of swirling and leaping dancers are included in A Festival of Russian Dance Tuesday, March 20, in Hulman Civic-University Center. All areas of the Soviet Union are represented in the many dances--from the Georgians who are famous for their "en pointe" to the traditional and lyrical "round" dances of the women. They are all attired in colorful costume and backed by a group of musicians with native instruments.

Both programs are presented by the Conventions Series at ISU and begin at 8 p.m.

Tickets for the NDR Symphony performance are on sale weekdays March 1-6 in the Tirey Memorial Union Box Office. Those for the Russian dance program are available March 8, 9, 19, and 20. Further details may be obtained by calling 232-6311, ext. 5598 or 5563.

How to save gas when the heat's on.

Of all the major energies, natural gas is the most efficient. That comes right from the U.S. Council on Environmental Quality.

If you use gas to heat your home, you can save even more energy by using it in the most efficient way. Just follow these conservation tips.

Turn the thermostat down.

This is the simplest and most effective step you can take. If every one of us with gas heat turns down the thermostat, the energy savings will really mount up.

Change the filter.

If you have a hot air system, check the filter and change it whenever it's clogged. This helps your gas heating system work at top efficiency. Also have the system checked each year, preferably ahead of the heating season.

Insulate the attic.

Adequate insulation in your attic floor will keep you from losing heat through the roof. It can give you gas savings of up to 30%, depending on where you live. If you haven't done this ahead of the heating season, do it now. (It will also keep your house cooler in summer.)

Make things weatherproof.

Use weatherstripping and caulking wherever it's needed. Use storm doors and storm windows on your home—they're gas-savers, too. All these gas-saving tips will help you use our country's most efficient fuel even more efficiently.

County Auditor Frank G. Walker has instituted his own investigation into procedures used in reassessing some 55,000 to 60,000 parcels of land in Vigo County. He also wants some answers before the County Board of Review begins its session April 1 to hear more than 1,100 appeals from property owners on their new valuations.

Saturday, Feb. 17

Duane L. Barrows, 50, ISU's swimming coach for 14 years, was killed in a one-car accident in Louisville, Ky., at 6:36 p.m. Barrows was a passenger in a car driven by Jeff Selby, team manager. The automobile was headed westbound on Interstate 64 and attempted to turn onto the Kennedy Bridge. Selby apparently lost control of the car and hit a guard rail. The occupants of the car were removed from the vehicle before it caught on fire.

Barrows, Selby, and other team members were on their way home from a swim meet.

Rose-Hulman defeated Southwestern at Memphis at Shook Fieldhouse, 83-75. Rose is 13-13 for the season.

Sunday, Feb. 18

A Vigo County Highway Department employee was injured this afternoon when the roadgrader he was operating was struck by a Milwaukee train at Stuckey Road. Rickie Hedden, 24, of West Terre Haute, was treated at Regional Hospital. He suffered a lacerated eye and chest injuries. Hedden was operating a roadgrader westbound on Stuckey Road when the accident occurred.

Larry W. Burton, 33, of 2010 Hendricks, was arrested following a lengthy investigation into reports that a subject posing as a police officer had stopped several lone female drivers in the early morning hours. The arrest stemmed from a complaint from a 19-year-old woman who said she had been stopped about 5 a.m. on Feb. 4 at Clinton Road and Stop 16. The Vigo County Sheriff's Department reports that the subject was wearing a blue uniform, complete with badge, and that his car had flasher lights. The incidents reportedly have been occurring since early December.

Tuesday, Feb. 20

Jury selection began this morning in the fourth trial of former Indiana Ku Klux Klan grand dragon William M. Chaney in the Terre Haute Division of U.S. District Court. Chaney, 56, a former Indianapolis resident, was convicted twice on charges of firebombing. The Seventh U.S. District Court of Appeals in Chicago set aside both convictions and ordered a new trial. The third trial was declared a mistrial because a jury was unable to reach a verdict after 20 hours of deliberations. Chaney is accused of attempting to set fire to Naegele Outdoor Advertising Co., Indianapolis, by using a Molotov cocktail.

ISU defeated Drake University in Des Moines, Iowa, 76-68. Although ISU was rated No. 1 in one of the major basketball polls last week, the Sycamores dropped to No. 2 despite the local ballclub grabbing 37 of the 60 first place ballots.

At about 8 a.m. the Humane Society received a call about the deer along the railroad tracks in the 900 block of Poplar Street. The deer then left that area and finally was chased down at 22nd and Crawford Streets. At about 9:20 a.m., police had the deer down with its hind legs tied.

Bill of the IMAGINEERS says:

Baldness is on it's way out. Hair is the in thing. The hesitancy of the bald male to cover his receding hair line is fast disappearing. More and more men are putting aside male hangups and the fear of what their friends may say to enjoy the advantages of wearing hair for appearance, comfort and attitude about themselves.

There's no longer a self-conscious feeling about wearing hair if you are bald. It's now more generally accepted. It's considered merely a personality aid. While balding men know their disappearing hair makes them look older, they usually don't realize baldness is effecting how they act. When a balding man begins to wear hair, the personality improvement is reflected in the way he walks, talks and reacts to others.

To help that balding man in your life regain his self confidence with hair, call the HAIR IMAGINEERS. Remember, your hair should always say "This is me and here I am."

Americans are pawns of their gas tanks

By J. A. Livingston
Economics Columnist

The new year is not yet two months old and President Carter's three major 1979 messages -- the State-of-the-Union, Budget, and Economic Report -- have become ancient history. Events have taken control of the nation's economic policy instead of the other way 'round.

The January jump in Producer (wholesale) Prices -- at an annual rate of more than 15 percent -- suggests that the administration's 7.4 percent inflation forecast for this year is overoptimistically conservative.

Nevertheless, G. William Miller, chairman of the Federal Reserve Board, continues to make speeches promising reduced inflation without a recession. The Carter administration is engaged in a three-way balancing effort:

1. To strengthen the dollar internationally -- keep it from declining in value relative to the mark, yen, Swiss franc, and other currencies.
2. To contain price boosts, so as to encourage labor leaders and workers to limit their demands for wage increases to 7 percent.
3. To sustain economic growth without reinforcing inflation; that will guard against a steep rise in unemployment.

At its December meeting, the Federal Open Market Committee (FOMC), which has the responsibility of regulating interest rates and the availability of money and credit, set forth Federal Reserve System objectives as follows: "To foster monetary and financial conditions that will resist inflationary pressures while encouraging continued moderate economic expansion and contributing to a sustainable pattern of international transactions."

Unanimity does not prevail, as the following excerpt from the summary of the FOMC discussion indicates:

"Concerning the overall situation, it was suggested on the one hand that the current and prospective pace of growth in activity was too rapid, that output was beginning to press against the limits of capacity, and that inflationary pressures -- which for a long time had been greater than generally projected -- were still increasing.

"An alternative appraisal of the latest data was that the strength in the current quarter, especially in consumer spending, most likely was an aberration -- similar to others during the past few years -- and that economic activity was remarkably well balanced for the present stage of the expansion.

"It was also suggested, however, that the strength in demand and activity, although possibly persisting for a quarter or two, might culminate in a recession in the second half of 1979."

The political unsettlement in Iran is another indication that events are wagging economic policy. The cut-off of Iranian oil reduces world supply and foreshadows an unexpected hike in prices. Yet, it could have a salutary consequence.

For far too long, the United States has behaved like a have-it-all nation when it no longer is. Yes, we are a rich people, yet, because we are so rich and voracious, we're becoming a have-not nation. Raw materials, once plentiful at home, now have to be imported -- oil particularly.

Americans have been living on the dollar -- exporting dollars to pay for imports. That's why the dollar has been weak in foreign exchange markets. It is in oversupply around the world.

Before he departed for Mexico, President Carter said he did not consider rationing or closing gasoline stations on weekends immediately necessary. Instead, he urged motorists to abide by the 55-mile-an-hour speed limit. As in wages and prices, he is relying on voluntarism.

A positive approach is necessary: The price of gasoline should be raised. A government tax ought to be imposed. It's often said that the motorcar has replaced apple pie in American hearts. Motorists will pay any price for gasoline. That's an untested assertion.

But suppose it's a correct assertion. If gasoline use remains the same at a higher price, then motorists will have less to spend on other things. Some consumption will decline. That will save the energy which would have been used to produce and distribute what consumers were forced to forgo.

We, Americans, should take stock. We're supposed to be resourceful, productive, and when it's urgent, prudent. Yet, we've allowed ourselves to become pawns of our gasoline tanks.

To turn it on and off, you screw the bulb in and screw it out. I think it's really an education if people would travel to other countries and see what their cost is compared to what we have in this country."

As others see it Sycamores are living in a fish bowl

Editor's note: The following story is reprinted from the authoritative "Basketball Weekly." It was done shortly after the New Mexico State game.

By Bob Ryan
Basketball Weekly

Terre Haute -- Day after day the rental cars are pointed from Indianapolis straight west on Interstate-70. The phone in coach Bill Hodges' office rings frequently, as if he had just discovered an alternative fuel to gasoline. Suddenly, Terre Haute, Indiana is on the itinerary of scouts and writers everywhere. New Orleans, San Francisco or Studio 54 it ain't, but Terre Haute is definitely Where It's Happening in the college basketball world these days. The Indiana State Sycamores, heretofore college basketball's mystery guest, are living in a fishbowl.

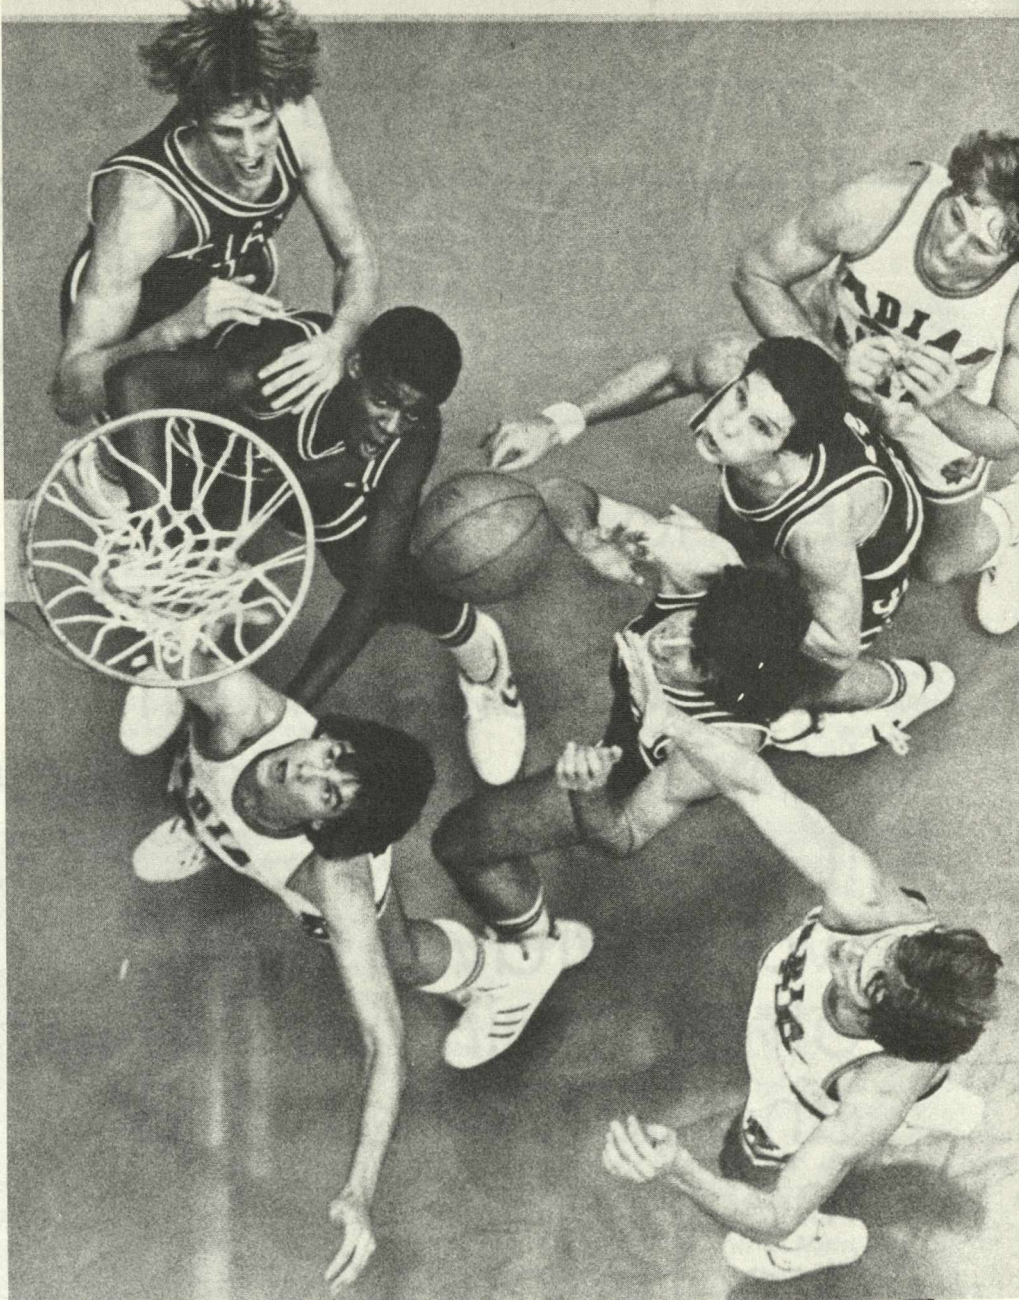

Are they the best college basketball team in the country? This publication says they are. The Associated Press and United Press International say that only Notre Dame is better. And yet some who have seen them wonder if the whole story isn't a cruel deception.

Inquisitors aren't going to get any hype job from Hodges, the 35-year old former assistant who was recently officially named as the head coach, after serving on an interim basis following the summer-time heart attack suffered by former coach Bob King. "Number One is not on my mind," Hodges claims. "The only Number One I'm interested in is being Number One in the Missouri Valley Conference."

Coming from another source, this downplaying of his team would be viewed as a classic snow job. But Hodges, who confesses to being overwhelmed by what has happened at the Indiana State campus this season, is serious. He doesn't know how good his team is, or could be. What he knew when this piece was written was that his team was 19-0 and had just won the biggest, and most feared, game of the season, an exhausting 91-89 road conquest of New Mexico State.

All most people know about Indiana State is that Larry Bird plays there. Ask the average fan about Gilbert, Nicks, Heaton, Miley, Reed and Staley, and they would probably say, "Aren't they the guys who did Nixon's taxes?" But as any good Sycamore fans know, these are the last names of Indiana State's "Other Guys."

Larry Bird won't be able to bring an NCAA championship to Terre Haute any more than Wilt Chamberlain could take Kansas to the title. In order to take home an NCAA championship a school needs more than just "Superman and the Four Dwarfs." What the Other Guys must prove down the stretch is that they are front-line players. And Hodges, of course, must prove that he is a front-line coach.

Hodges is certain of one thing; namely, that this is a better Indiana State team than its immediate predecessor. The Sycamores rose to as high as fourth place in the national rankings last season before plummeting out the ratings. The team failed to win the MVC title and would up going to the quarter-finals of the NIT, dropping a one-point decision to Rutgers in the latter's home gym. A few years ago, 23-9 would have been considered to be an eminently respectable record in Terre Haute, but since the team had gotten off to a 12-0 start, the final record was something of a disappointment.

The nucleus of the Sycamores is comprised of three junior college products, two major college transfers (including Bird himself) and two recruits. These seven men will determine Indiana State's NCAA title chances.

Aside from Bird, the key men are junior guard Carl Nicks and junior center Alex Gilbert. Nicks returned to Indiana State after spending a year playing at Gulf Coast Community College. He had averaged 2.2 points a game as an Indiana State freshman two years ago, but he was asked to spend the year at the Florida JC in order to gain additional playing experience. The thinking was that Nicks was a talented, but unpolished kid who would not be playing much behind last year's guards and who could blossom if given some playing time. The likeable Chicago product (Englewood High) was amenable to the proposal, and he went down south, where he averaged 22.4 ppg and gained confidence. Gilbert, a skinny center, came to ISU from Coffeyville (Kan.) Community College, where he averaged 16 points and 11 rebounds a game. The slender (6-7, 185) leaper (a 40-inch vertical jump) plays center on offense and forward on defense, while Bird flip-flops the roles with Gilbert.

Other key holdovers include 6-2 sophomore guard Steve Reed, 6-5 junior swingman Bob Heaton (whose 40-footer at the buzzer sent the Sycamores into overtime against New Mexico State), 6-8 junior forward Brad Miley and 6-4 senior swingman Leroy Staley.

And then, of course, there is the 6-9 Bird, the consensus All-American who has cut himself off from the written press. Much has been made of his reluctance to talk with sportswriters, which is silly. If a 21-year old kid says he has nothing to say, who are we to doubt him? Anyway, it's more fun to talk about his Magic-like passes or to engage in a debate as to which 17 former NBA All-Stars he most resembles. Anyway, Bird's quote boycott has had an interesting by-product -- it has focused attention on the other kids, thus avoiding a potential coaching problem.

The team's biggest technical flaw is strength, or lack of same. Last year coach King had not one, but two seven-footers, the other center being an imposing young physical specimen, name Richard Johnson. Now he only has one man (Bird) over 6-8, and he has a 6-7 center who can be pushed around. And Bird, while intimidated by nobody, is still no Darryl Dawkins in the bicep department.

The Sycamores depend on both Bird and Nicks, a 6-2 southpaw whose intensity is his greatest asset ("He's even a better person than a kid" says Hodges of the Chicago minister's son) to score, and score big. Together they average over 50 points a game, and on nights when either man is off, Indiana State has problems. Such an occasion was the Creighton game of January 27 when Nicks, after dunking one of the prettiest bang'bang tap play you'd ever hope to see (Gilbert to Bird, who slap-passed left-handed to the cutting Nicks), missed his other six shots in the first half. Bird, too, was cold, and the result was a game pulled out only by strong man-to-man defense, an area in which the Sycamores are definitely underrated.

On nights like those the key man becomes Staley, a former starter who is trying hard to make the adjustment into becoming a swing man after starting as a guard last season. A high school forward, the JC transfer (Florida College) has now had to re-adjust to the frontcourt.

"Leroy has been very important to us," says Hodges. "I think stamina was a big problem for him as a starter, and this way I can ask him to give it all he's got while he's out there, and not worrying about pacing himself."

Miley, a slender, industrious forward from Rushville, Indiana, is regarded as a good defensive player. Heaton, the New Mexico State hero, is a transfer from Denver who can be classified as "solid," while Reed is your basic point guard type.

"I've been conditioning their minds for this all year," he continued. "Ever since we broke into the Top 20, actually, after we beat the Russians earlier this year. I used our pre-conference schedule strictly as a learning experience. I mean, that's exactly what I used it for, whether we had won or lost. The ranking is nice. They might get an extra kiss from their girl friends, or something like that, but that's all it should mean to them right now. We keep reminding them that the only important things is winning the conference."

So whether this is a Number One Team or a Number Eight Team, the fact remains that it has achieved a great deal, that it believes in itself more with each passing game and that it enters every game knowing that no matter what else happens, the other team will not have the best player on the floor. The rental cards will keep arriving for the rest of this month.

General Assembly is playing slow-down game

By James L. McDowell

INDIANAPOLIS---Billy Packer definitely would not be impressed. Even the vivacious and loquacious Al McGuire might have difficulty finding positive descriptive words. . .if he were watching the Indiana General Assembly in action.

If one looks at the Hoosier legislative process as a basketball game, it may help the casual observer to gain some understanding of how the lawmakers function.

First half--In the first 45 sessions days (due to end March 9 unless both chambers agree to recess in order to allow committees uninterrupted time to consider bills) each house devotes most of its time to bills introduced by its own members, and to feeling out the offensive thrusts of the other chamber.

Second half--The next 11 session days (which would be March 26 if no recesses are necessary) see the legislators consider bills passed by the other house, winnowing down even further the large number of bills introduced to that 20 percent or so which will be sent on to the Governor.

Overtime--The final five days of the long session are reserved for action on conference committee reports, and this often is when strange things can happen to the contents of bills and where most of the action is. In this overtime session, "sudden death" is still permitted.

Indeed, this session the Indiana General Assembly has already witnessed a "four corners" offense--a deliberate slowdown in an attempt to gain control of the situation. Three weeks ago, House Democrats used (House Republicans said "abused") their privilege to introduce amendments to each of the bills in the Governor's tax package and to call frequent caucuses to discuss strategy. This parliamentary maneuvering resulted in only five bills being advanced to final consideration over a four-day period.

Perhaps Packer and his colleagues from Atlantic Coast country would have appreciated this approach, but McGuire and followers of the "city game" would have roundly disagreed.

The basketball analogy also carries over into the Senate which this year appears to lack the big man necessary to dominate the action.

Senator Martin Edwards (R-New Castle), the new president pro tem of the upper chamber, may lack the muscle under the boards that his predecessors in that position were able to exercise. Nevertheless, early in the session, he decreed that all bills in the Senate would require bipartisan sponsors, or they would not be heard in committee.

Minority Democrats, who lack a strong bench, naturally cried "foul"--but they have rarely been able to get to the charity stripe, at least thus far in the first half.

Further, action in the Senate to this point might suggest that the legislative roundballers are regressing some four decades, back to the era when there was a center jump after each basket.

Rather than continuing the somewhat modestly progressive actions of previous legislatures, this session of the General Assembly--especially in the Senate--has seemed intent upon repealing earlier moves.

Prior to intermission, the solons already have approved measures which would nullify ratification of the Equal Right Amendment; repeal the direct primary for nomination of candidates for Governor and Lieutenant Governor after only one trial; extend the selection of employees in certain state departments to a 100 percent patronage basis; void the motor vehicle inspection law; and reduce the length of each legislative session by 15 days.

This week the House Republicans were able to overcome a tight zone defense thrown up by their opponents and survive a close tussle with the Governor's budget proposal reasonably intact. An $8.9 billion spending plan for the 1979-1981 biennium was readied for Senate action along party lines and over objections of Democrats who, it might be noted, had a mediocre recruiting year.

While Republicans were able to overcome some difficulty in the House, the Senate members of the Governor's party will no doubt be able to breakaway and "slam dunk" the budget home over their weaker opponents.

As with the national collegiate championship, it is yet too early to predict a winner. So it with the final product of the current session of the Indiana legislature.

Boston Globe . . .

Judkins boy and he's very close with Robey. He might go to Boston just because Rick's there."

Could the ole' redhead be that smart? Would he have traded for Robey just to insure that Bird would follow? Great move, Red. If it's true.

Bird can pass and shoot, but can he talk? Who knows? Indiana State has a curious custom where it shields Bird from the media and closes the locker room after the game.

I mean, the door isn't padlocked and the players can get in and so can Ken Boyer and Ted Simmons, but the scribblers from St. Louis, Chicago, Indianapolis, Boston and Terre Haute wait outside, talking only to each other. Boring.

"You can ask for a player or two," says Ed McKee, the ISU sports information director. "And we'll bring them to an interview room."

Larry Bird?
"No," replies McKee, "anybody but Larry Bird."
"We do it that way because Larry wants it like that and we think it's best," says Hodges. "Larry's been burned, burned bad by the press."

When was the fire?
"Early on in the year one of the Terre Haute papers burned him," replies the coach. "Larry was asked what was the main difference between the coaching Bob King, my predecessor, and my coaching. Larry said something about how I get the players out of tests when we're on the road. You know, schedule them to a different time."

"But the papers don't write it that way. It comes out in the paper that Larry says, 'Bill Hodges gets his team out of tests.' It was really bad. The guy just out and out left out the 'when we're on the road part.' Since then, Larry's not been talkin."
Can he?

Oh yes, says Hodges, "Larry can be downright witty. Like before he wasn't talking, when the Missouri Valley Conference had a press conference for all the teams and somebody asked Larry why he never fouls out of a game. 'Because I don't play defense,' he said. He can be really witty."

Bird has been known to talk into tape recorders, so now the procession of reporters from Chicago, Boston, Sports Illustrated, Life and other parts have been known to stick a microphone in his face. It works, sometimes.

On the way out of town, the streets are still an ice rink. Terre Haute and Larry Bird can be taken with a grain of salt. And Eugene V. Debs probably would have crossed the street to see Larry Bird play. But not to hear him talk.

ours— Real pride

There is more than one refreshing aspect to Indiana State University having the number one ranked basketball team in the country. And in having Kurt Thomas, one of the best male gymnasts in the world, recognized at the White House.

There is more than the usual sense of pride in ISU students and Terre Haute residents because of these two factors. Newspapers, magazines, radio and television reports are full of news about the team, Larry Bird, Thomas, the university and the city.

And most of it is complimentary. Some of the other -- the non-complimentary -- is true, and some of it is, well, it's just the kind of thing that gets written about small towns by reporters from big cities.

To a city that is used to bad publicity, though, this is a great change and perhaps it represents the beginning of a new image for the city and the university.

ISU has long labored in the shadow of its better-known cousins, primarily Indiana University and Purdue University. While ISU educated future teachers, the others took care of the doctors, the lawyers and the farming chiefs. They have been the ones who have run the state, its institutions and its government.

Terre Haute, a city which hasn't grown in this century, has been in a similar position. The city has received notice all right, but it has been notice of its gambling, its prostitution, its labor unrest, its political abuses.

Consequently, ISU and Terre Haute have shared a hunger for pride, for recognition of legitimate roles played and of accomplishments claimed. The need was underscored years ago when we began to call ourselves "The Pride City."

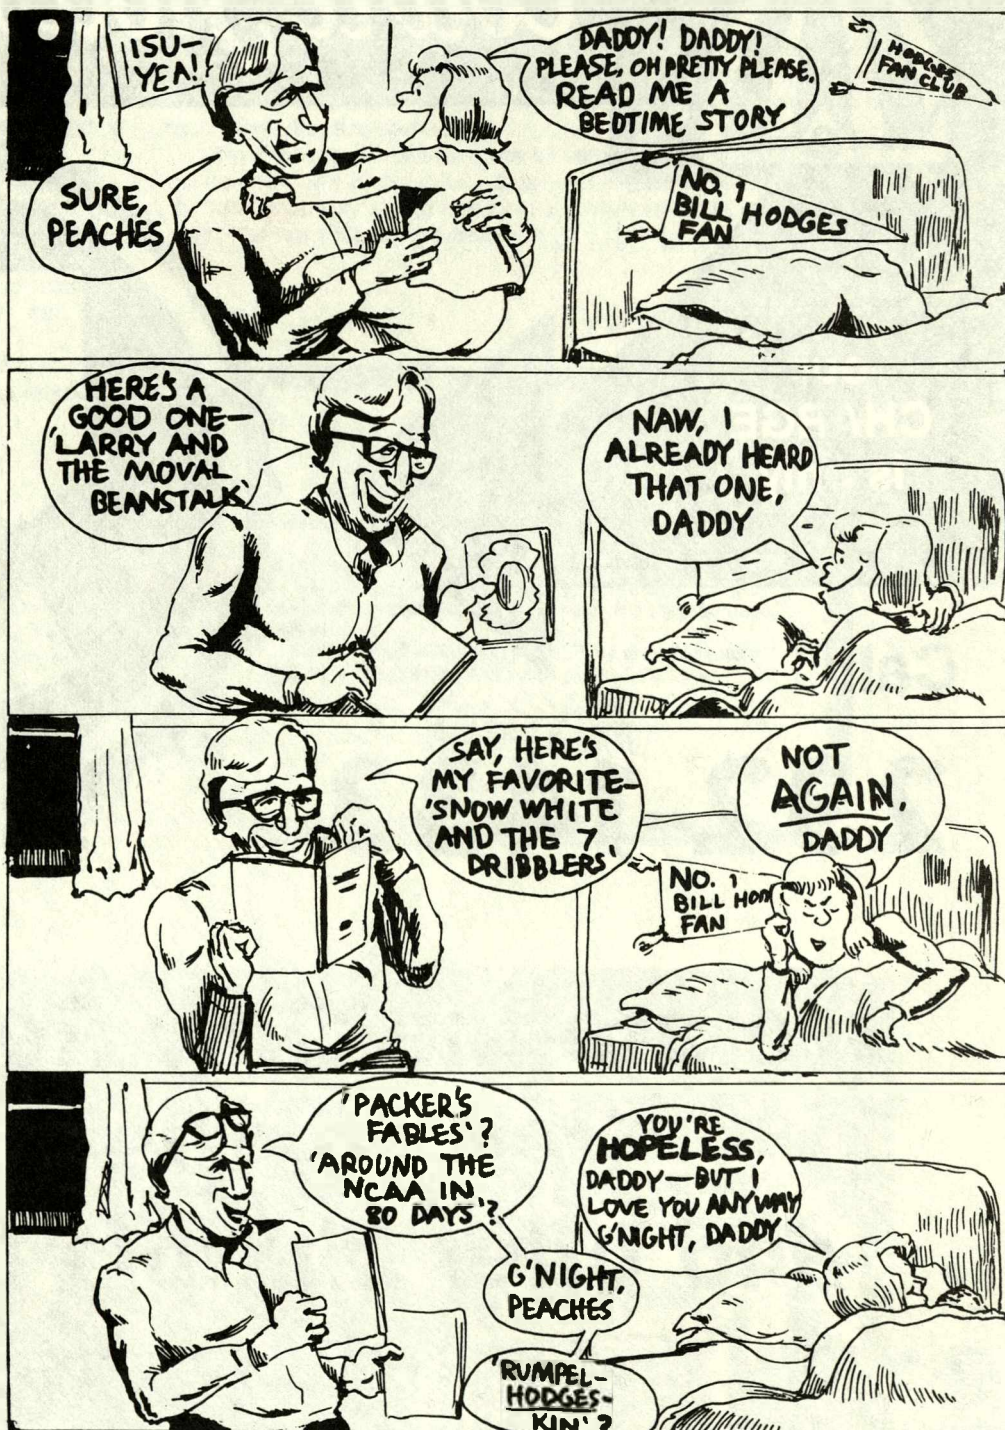

Now, "little" Indiana State is known to every sports fan in the county and Terre Haute is emerging as the new "cornbelt capital." We may find it a bit humorous, but it sure is fun.

And what could be more appropriate than basketball? There can be nary a person in Terre Haute who hasn't tossed a ball through a hoop at one time or another. And there is hardly a student at ISU who can't remember when his high school team "almost" won the sectional.

It's nice to be on the map for something legal, and it is bound to have positive offshoots for the university and the community. Indiana State is one of the major employers in the community, but its future, like the future of many universities, is clouded by the coming crunch in college enrollment.

The success of Larry Bird, Carl Nicks, the team, Kurt Thomas and his teammates could have a tangible effect on the number of students and therefore on the budget of the university. While bigger budgets do not guarantee continued academic improvement, it will help.

And it's great for the ego when Terre Haute is mentioned, not as a cesspool of crime and corruption, but as the home of excellence in at least two athletic endeavors.

ISU Faculty Senate lauds Bird

The following resolution was adopted recently by the Indiana State University Faculty Senate

During an era when a college dropout mode may be predominant, and loyalty to a school, a team and amateur athletics a matter for cynicism, Larry Bird's decision to complete his college education is exemplary. He is in the process of demonstrating that a decision that is based on high principles and that foregoes short-term gains may be to the ultimate advantage of students.

His refusal to tout himself through public interviews has incurred the venom of some reporters. These reporters have chosen to ignore the fact that he has not hesitated to give much-used public interviews in support of such organizations as the Terre Haute Boys Club and the United Fund.

We commend Larry Bird as Number 1.
